TAMWORTH.

We have had very backward weather this spring, frosts nearly every night. The crops look exceptionally good but gardens, roots and vegetables are very backward owing to the cold nights.

Trade is not as good as usual owing to the scarcity of money.

There was a sad accident at our station last week. A man named McKeown tried to board a freight train when moving out of the yard and fell under the train and had both legs mangled. Our Dr. did all he could and had him on the way for Kingston Hospital, but he died after leaving Yarker. He was very much intoxicated which was the cause of the accident. We as citizens of this town censure the new law regarding the bottle system now sanctioned by the Government and think it a very much worse act than has ever been passed and will cause much evil in every way and should not have been passed. Instead of checking the drinking it has increased it and made our village and county at large law breakers in every respect and never should have been passed.

Let us tell you about the kind of paints we sell and the prices at which we sell them, before you buy elsewhere. There is more than one quality in this kind of goods. At Hooper's—Napanee's Largest Drug Store.

SANS SOUCI CAMP GROUNDS.

Sans souci (meaning without a care) is situated on the east shore of the Bay of Quinte about two miles north of Bogarts.

The property about seven acres was bought from Mr. Miller and Mr. Huyck, by the members of whom there are fifteen—the membership being limited to sixteen members. The charter members are:—

J. E. Robinson, President; Geo. A. Blewitt, Treasurer; E. J. Pollard Sec'y; F. H. Carson, C. M. Warner, Mark Graham, A. E. Paul, Jas. Roblin, W. J. Shannon, C. H. Spencer, D. A. Nesbit, John Derry, Dr. Wartman, U. M. Wilson, W. H. Steacy.

The property has a frontage on the bay of slightly over 1100 feet and is especially adapted for a camp ground, being well wooded and having a magnificent view from nearly every plot.

The club house will be at the back of the lot and directly in front of the wharf. From its elevation one can see the bay for miles in both directions even looking over the cottages that line the bank. Between the Club House and cottages will be the recreation grounds. These will be fitted up for tennis, basket ball, croquet, bowling, etc., and access will be had to a good base ball diamond on adjoining property.

Visitors are enthusiastic over the conveniences of the camp. A dock has been built the face of which is 40 feet and the depth of water about 9 feet, which will allow any boat to dock there. An L has been built from the shore out to the dock 60 feet, this angle giving good protection to motor boats from south and west winds. A never failing spring on the property supplies campers with the very best water. The members of the club are doing

I. O. D. E.

The United Empire Loyalist Chapter visited Fairview school on the Kingston road, on Friday, June 6th, and gave a patriotic programme for the pupils.

The Regent, who presided, told them something of the work of the I. O. D. E., and of the advantages to be gained—in whatever part of the world one may be—of being under the protection of the British Flag. Mrs. Fred Hooper read "The Flag of the Empire," which took us around the world, touching at all the British possessions, and telling of the unfurling of the flag somewhere at sunrise, at every hour of the twenty-four. Mrs. W. G. Wilson spoke to the children about the comrade correspondence Branch of the Order. Mrs. F. S. Richardson read a poem, "The Colors of the Flag," after which the "Maple Leaf Forever" was sung by the visitors, and pupils of the school.

The Regent read, by request, her interesting paper descriptive of Ottawa and the Parliament Buildings, illustrated with pictures of the capital, after which she presented a framed portrait of King George and Queen Mary to the school.

Miss Sproule thanked the members of the Chapter for their programme and for the portrait and gave them a cordial invitation to visit the school again. The proceedings closed with the singing of the National Anthem. The executive appreciates very much the kindness of those who drove the members to and from the school.

These two essentials explain the great increase in demand for our bread since the installation of our new electrical bread mixer.

We have now a thoroughly up-to-date and sanitary bread plant, including bread mixer, sanitary steel troughs, etc. As a result we are able to place before the public a pure, clean wholesome, smooth-grained loaf of bread.

HOSTILITIES IMMINENT

The Balkan States Situation Reached a Crisis.

Servia and Greece Are Ready to Macedonian Territory and Bulgaria Cause For War—Latter Believed to Be Hard Up for Money—Body of Turks Anxious to Fight With Bulgars.

LONDON, June 10.—With both stubbornly refusing to make the least concession, war between the Balkan states is hourly becoming imminent. If Bulgaria sends a tentative reply to the Servian note, nothing indicates that she will answer otherwise—Servia and will proclaim the annexation of unoccupied Macedonian territory thereby establishing a definite belli.

The only hopeful feature of the situation consists in the belief that Servia is lacking the sinews of war. Servia and Greece are not only situated in this respect, but also possess superior strategic positions. These facts probably account for the calmness with which Servia applies regards the prospects of war.

Former Colleague of Balfour Dies In Fiftieth Year.

LONDON, June 10.—The death of the Rt. Hon. George Wyndham, who was Chief Secretary for Ireland from 1900 to 1905, in Arthur J. Balfour's Conservative Cabinet, occurred yesterday in Paris, according to private despatches received here. He was in his 50th year and had been Conservative member of Parliament for Dover since 1889.

Soldier, Parliamentary and author was the late Rt. Hon. George Wyndham. Born in London, he, as an officer of the Coldstream Guards, took part in the Suakim campaign of 1885. In 1889 he entered the House of Commons. He was Under Secretary for War 1898-1900 and Chief Secretary for Ireland 1900-1905. His term of office was marked by the passage of an Irish land bill, which has done much to hasten the establishment of a peasant proprietary.

He was the author of several books, including "North's Plutarch," "Shakspere's Pomes" and "Ronsard and La Pléiade." His favorite author was Sir Walter Scott, and by the time he was eleven years of age he had thrice read "Rob Roy."

MAY LOSE ITS GRANT.

Hamilton Hospital Comes In For Official Scoring.

TORONTO, June 10.—Disgracefully dirty and untidy, overcrowded, poorly ventilated, are a few of the adjectives applied to the public wards in Hamilton City Hospital by Dr. Bruce Smith, inspector of hospitals and charities for Ontario. Dr. Smith has advised that the Government grant, which amounted to $10,286 last year, be discontinued, as the hospital is far below any modern standard.

The inspector visited the hospital recently, and in his report calls attention to the fact that his former recommendations have been ignored. The buildings, he says, appear old and dilapidated. The main kitchen is poor. The separate building for tuberculosis patients is disgracefully overcrowded. Nothing is apparently being done to remove the disadvantages under which the hospital is conducted.

A Hamilton newspaper demands that an emergency meeting of the City Council be called to consider the situation.

WEST IS CARELESS.

Alberta Towns Responsible For Credit, Says Aitken.

MONTREAL, June 10.—While Maxwell Aitken, British M.P., arrived here yesterday from England as an optimist as ever regarding the future of Canada, he regards the present outlook in the money market as anything but reassuring.

"Canada has been over-borrowed," he remarked, in the course of a interview. "There can be no question about that. The provinces and municipalities have been getting too much money, and now we will have to till the effect of this has worn off. I am not referring to old Canada, neither can anything be said as to the financial methods of the provinces. The west, however, been going too fast in a great many ways."

"Have you Alberta in mind?" was asked.

"Yes," he replied, "that is where the shoe pinches. Alberta's financial has been anything but wise. Western municipalities generally been going it at a rapid pace, but course, the wonderful development and rapidly increasing population help them out in the end."

USED FOR PARTY FUNDS

New Sensation Sprung in Marconi Share Scandal.

Revelation is Made at Inquiry Into Charges Against Liberal Ministers in Britain, That Former Government Whip Invested Party Funds in American Marconi—Home Rule Bill Starts Journey.

LONDON, June 10.—When Premier Asquith moved the second reading of the home rule for Ireland bill yesterday a Parliamentary battle began which, it waged with as much violence and bitterness as the political warfare carried on outside of the House, will make the session a red-letter one. The Unionists have begun the fight with their hopes running higher than at any time during Mr. Asquith's Premiership, while the Liberals are suffering from what may be termed "Marconitis."

Yesterday the "scandals" whereupon the great wireless telegraphy inventor's name has been bestowed were marked by somewhat startling developments. It transpired that Lord Murray of Elibank, the mystery of whose silence was recently related, had not been so mute as was supposed, for he had exchanged cablegrams with the chairman of the Marconi Inquiry Committee, Sir Albert Spicer, last April, when he declared it was impossible to return to England from South Africa before July. Spicer is blamed for having kept the information to himself till Lord Murray was subjected to comments of, to say the least, a most ungenerous nature.

More sensational even is the discovery that Lord Murray's purchases of American Marconi, outside of those he acquired in conjunction with Mr. Lloyd George and Sir Rufus Isaacs, were made for a trust account which his brother, now in England, states was for the Liberal party funds. The Unionist critics have been making invidious comparison of the fact that Murray has not yet paid for the stock he got in April from Sir Rufus Isaacs and Lloyd George, and the fact that the 3,000 additional shares he purchased in May were fully paid for. The explanation, of course, is found in the circumstance that the May purchase was made for the Liberal party funds.

Percy Illingworth, who succeeded Lord Murray as Chief Whip of the Liberal party in August, and is at present controller of the party funds, stated that he had not got the shares in question, and knew nothing whatever about them, except what Lord Murray's brother had told him a few days ago for the first time.

national character. It has already sat in Washington.

The cases on the list this week are not of particular importance. The first to be proceeded with is what is known as the King Robert case. It is a claim of $555 interest on $26,428, the amount of a deferred payment by the U. S. Government to the claimants. The McCall Dinning Co. of Baltimore contracted with the U. S. Government, to convey 30,000 tons of coal from Baltimore to Manila, and leased the vessel King Robert from R. Chapman & Sons, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, to carry the cargo. The contract was performed, but when the time for payment came, the naval appropriations were exhausted. From Nov. 17, 1905, to the following March, the account was unpaid and the claim now made is for interest on the amount for that period.

The U. S. claims that its Government is not liable like a private individual for interest on deferred payment in the absence of statutory authority, and even where it is provided by law, it is not the practice of the U. S. to allow it. The argument took up the afternoon sitting of the commission. Judgment will not be given now.

ZEPPELIN'S ACHIEVEMENT.

Veteran Aeronaut Makes an International Trip.

VIENNA, June 10.—Accepting an invitation from Emperor Francis Joseph, Count Zeppelin, with his airship Sachsen, paid a visit to Vienna yesterday. The Sachsen started from Baden-Baden at 5.30 yesterday morning and reached Vienna at 1.30 p.m.
After cruising for twenty minutes over the capital the airship took a straight course to Schoenbrunn Castle, there manoeuvring twenty minutes and saluting the emperor, who was awaiting it. Thence the Sachsen proceeded to the Aspern fields where it was landed smoothly.

Besides Count Zeppelin and his son,
22 other people were board the Sach-
sen. The journey from Baden Baden, a distance of about 430 miles, was made at an average speed of over 50 miles an hour.

The express train from Baden Baden to Vienna occupies 16 1-2 hours in the trip.

Count Zeppelin is the emperor's guest in Vienna. His reception on landing in the Aspern fields, was exclusively of a military character.
Four hundred soldiers of the aviation brigades were present to help with the landing. Two hours after the arrival of the Sachsen, a terrible storm swept over the Aspern fields.

Count Zeppelin was publicly welcomed in the Town Hall last night.

"You get a shillin' for bein' late,

Famous Collection of Antlers.

Of the famous collection of antlers formed in the seventeenth century—only two or three have escaped the general fate of conflagrations, sieges and pillage. One of these is in Moritzburg, the King of Saxony's historical hunting castle, near Dresden. The great banqueting hall of the castle of Moritzburg is a chamber of noble proportions sixty-six feet long by thirty-four wide and thirty-eight feet high. On its otherwise unadorned white walls hang seventy-one pairs of magnificent antlers, which one may describe as the most famous of their kind in the world. Not a single one carries less than twenty-four times or is less than 200 years old.

A Monster Rowboat.

The first big vessel that history records, but not of steam, was that of Ptolemy Philopater, an Egyptian, who is said to have constructed a barge 420 feet long, 57 feet broad and 72 feet deep from the highest point of the stern, which in olden days, even past the time of Columbus, was always the highest point of a ship.
This vessel, according to historical records, was propelled by 4,000 rowers, who sat in five banks, using oars fifty-seven feet in length that were weighted with lead at the handles.

PURSUED BY RUNAWAY.

Toronto Man Meets With Unusual and Serious Accident.

TORONTO, June 10.—Pursued by a runaway horse along St. Patrick street late yesterday afternoon A. Spellman, 125 D'Arcy street, was at length trampled down by the animal near the corner of Spadina and St. Patrick and seriously injured. The horse, galloping at a furious pace, disappeared and the owner cannot be found.

Very few people witnessed the accident, and it was supposed that Spellman had fallen off the bicycle he was riding. A man who saw the whole occurrence stated that Spellman attempted to get out of the way of the runaway beast by going to one side of the road. The horse seemed to divine his intention, and turned in also. The man then sped to the other side and the horse followed.

Spellman became excited and rode into the centre of the road with the result that he was run down. He was taken to the Western Hospital and is in a serious condition.

This morning a special committee

The position of chief executive officer

Dr. Grant last June, but he declined.

The board has now called upon the Facts in Nature

FOR centuries it has been known that Nature's most valuable health giving agents for the cure of disease are found in our American forests. Over forty years ago Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the 'Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N.Y., used the powdered extracts as well as the liquid extracts of native medicinal plants, such as Bloodroot and Queen's root, Golden Seal and Stone root, Cherry bark and Mandrake, for the cure of blood diseases. This prescription as put up in liquid form was called and has enjoyed a large sale for all these years in every drug store in the land. You can now obtain the powdered extract in sugar-coated tablet form of your medicine dealer, or send 50c in one-cent postage stamps for trial box to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., and tablets will be mailed, postage prepaid.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" makes rich, red blood, invigorates the stomach, liver and bowels and through them the whole system. Skin affections, blotches, boils, pimples and eruptions—result of bad blood—are eradicated by this alterative extract—as thousands have testified.

COERCION AND EXTRAVAGANCE

SESSION OF PARLIAMENT JUST ENDED WITNESSED THE CLOSURE AND GREATEST EXPENDITURE IN CANADIAN HISTORY.

The session of Parliament now come to its end has been remarkable for many things, but clearly for things undone, even out of the sparse programme laid out in the speech from the throne. It has been the most spendthrift session Canada has ever known: the most miserly in statecraft. The main results to the people are the reckless voting of $250,000,000 for all sorts of extravagance, the passage of the Aid to Agriculture Bill and the Banking Bill, as amended by the Senate, the introduction of the closure as an attempt to force measures through Parliament, and the putting of a man in jail because he refused to disclose his private business to his own disadvantage. On the negative side it has witnessed the wasting of weeks and months of time by the ill-advised efforts of Mr. Borden to enforce government by cabinet instead of by Parliament. It has seen the Naval Aid Bill fought through the Commons and then rejected by the Senate as unnecessary, improper and unconstitutional, both in its matter and the manner in which it was jammed through. It has seen the Highway's Aid Bill again presented, again amended by the Senate so as to make it conform to constitutional and proper methods of expenditure, and once more killed by the Borden government, who are determined to have the handling of this money or not let it be voted at all. It has seen the Prime Minister of the Dominion deliberately swallow his earlier pledges and refuse to appeal to the people when the main planks of his sessional platform were defeated. It has seen the nominal leader of the government turned into a figurehead, at one time swayed by his Nationalist allies, at others by Hon. Rogers and his spend-money-quick friends, and at all times dominated by the exigency of the moment.

It would be hard to find in the history of the British Dominions any such record of a government, which had so completely failed to show any instinct for even taking advantage of the gifts which fortune placed in its way.

and child in Canada this year is $14 poorer because the Borden government was elected. Every head of a family of five has $70 more taken out of his yearly income than he would have had under the Laurier government.

GREATEST SPENDERS IN WORLD Canada's Expenditures This Year in Advance of any Other Country or Dominion.

A comparison of the budgets of other nations will show what the Borden governments spendings really mean. Germany, with the greatest army in the world, spends $740 a head; Great Britain, whose taxpayers Mr. Borden wants to bonus with $35,000,000, spends $18.50 per head; the United States $9.65; France, with the fear of Germany always at hand, $23, Canada $32. The only two countries which surpass Canada are Australia with $48.50 per head and New Zealand with $42.75. But both Australia and New Zealand have the most advanced socialistic governmental systems in the world, and make large profits out of state systems of railways, hotels, pleasure resorts and all sorts of state owned enterprises. They give to citizens some direct returns by way of old age pensions, sick benefits, out-of-work benefits, and the like.

On a square basis of quid quo Canada to-day is by a very long way the most highly taxed country in the world. If Mr. Borden and Mr. Rogers continue their work long the cost of living will soon become intolerable.

A STRIKING CONTRAST.

In 1897, at the close of the first year of the Laurier Government the total expenditure was $42,972,755. In 1911, their last year, with an immense expenditure on the National Transcontinental and other public works which would eventually bring back a return, the expenditure was only $122,861,250. There had been less than a trebling of expenditure in fourteen of the most wonderful years of prosperity and increase of population Canada had ever known.

In 1912, at the close of the first year of the Borden administration, the gross national expenditure was $137,142,082. This year the government proposes to spend $251,623,490. It has almost doubled the expenditure within two years, without undertaking a single work of national magnitude. The expenditure for the last year of the Laurier government was approximately $18.50 per head; after two years of Borden and Rogers it has grown to an estimate for the present year of $32. Defeating Laurier will cost the head of every average household in Canada for this year alone apportioned among and paid to the several Provinces of the Dominion in proportion to the population of such Provinces respectively, as shown by the then next preceding census."

This amendment carried in the Senate by 45 to 18. It was rejected by the Tory Government because it insisted upon provincial rights, because it would put the money into the hands of the provincial governments, and because it insisted that every province should be guaranteed its fair share of the money. Rather than sacrifice its determination to have the handling of this big fund in any manner it pleased the Borden government for the second time killed this bill, which, as amended would have been greatly to the general benefit.

A MECHANICAL EYE.

Frenchman Has a Device Which Will Detect Burglars.

A French inventor has recently designed a burglar alarm which is a very close mechanical substitute for a human watchman. The device is arranged to operate before the slightest injury has been inflicted upon a safe by a burglar. In fact, it has no material contact with its mechanical equivalent of an eye which will detect the faint light from a dark lantern or even a match, hence making it a good fire alarm as well as a burglar alarm.

As our readers have probably guessed the "mechanical eye" is a selenium cell, such as used in picture-telegraphing apparatus, for the reason that the electrical conductivity of selenium varies approximately with the amount of light that falls on it. The mechanical eye consists of a cylindrical box, four inches in diameter, and about an inch thick, containing a band of selenium wound up in a coil. There is one of these boxes for each room that it is to be protected, but they all communicate their sensations of light by electricity to a common receiver, which is designed as follows:

In the field of a large horse-shoe magnet is suspended a thin wire, about a foot in length. This wire carries a very light rectangular aluminium frame, wound with a galvanometer wire. The galvanometer coil A weighs about an ounce, and has an electrical resistance of five thousand ohms. One terminal of the coil dips into a cup of mercury B, while the other connects with the suspension wire. The transmitter or mechanical eye D is placed in circuit with battery E, coil A and mercury cup B. When a ray of light fall on the cell D it varies the strength of the current passing through the coil A causing it to turn, bringing its lower terminal into contact with one or other of the set-screws F, and thereby closing a relay circuit containing the alarm gong G. The sensitiveness of the receiver may be varied by adjusting the screws F.

The alarm bell is actuated through the intermediary of a "jack" similar to that used in telephone switchboards, so that once the circuit is closed the bell will continue to ring until it is stopped by throwing a switch. Equipped with this alarm apparatus the good man of the house can slumber in peace, confident that the unblinking selenium eye will keep an unrelenting watch on his safe or his silver chest.

But the eye possesses a failing common to all mechanical substitutes for human agencies. It cannot distinguish between right and wrong. When it sees a light it sounds the alarm regardless of what that light may be. The inventor explains that during the day-time the mechanical

Curious Devices For Which Patents Have Been Granted

THE TREETOP RAILWAY

This Weird Scheme Involved Building an Elevated Road Supported by Growing Trees—An Ingenious Patent Trap and a Noiseless Alarm Clock

A chewing gum locket and an elevated railroad supported by the branches of growing trees are among the devices which have been granted patents our government. The patent of quite broad minded in its ideas ought to be patented.

The chewing gum locket was patented Jan. 1, 1890, by Christopher W. Ertson of Somerville, Tenn. The resembles the ordinary one which is used to carry the sweetheart's picture but instead of a photograph it is with a porcelain glass interior.

money-making friends, and at an time dominated by the exigency of the moment.

It would be hard to find in the history of the British Dominions any such record of a government, which had so completely failed to show any instinct for even taking advantage of the gifts which fortune placed in its way.

A QUARTER-BILLION SESSION, Canada's Expenditure Under Borden Government Greatest of any Country in the World.

Although under Mr. Borden's system Parliament has been unable to accomplish any really constructive legislation during the past six months it has succeeded in scattering more money by many millions than any Canadian Parliament ever did before. The gross expenditure planned exceeds $250,000,000. This means that every man, woman and in the Dominion will be taxed to the extent of $32 a head to carry out the extravagances of Hon. Mr. Rogers and his colleagues. The average man with a wife and two children will be just $128 poorer since Parliament opened, estimating Canada's population at 8,000,000. Every municipality of 5,000 people must contribute $160,000; every city of 50,000 people must pay up $1,600,000.

It would be hard for any citizen to name any direct benefit he is to get from this unprecedented outpouring of national wealth. It would not be hard for the great contractors and "the interests" to show where they were benefitting by this amazing extravagance. It should not be difficult for the average citizen to understand that with all this huge scattering of money the Tory war chest will not be altogether neglected.

This is a brief statement of the main features of the spending carnival:

Estimates for 1913-14.....	$ 202,622,499
Canadian Northern Subsidies.....	15,000,000
Gen. railway subsidies.....	7,000,000
Subsidies to Ontario Government railways.....	2,000,000
Vote for aid to agriculture.....	10,000,000
Loan to Grand Trunk.....	15,000,000

Total $ 251,622,499

This is not all. Had the present cabinet of spendthrifts carried out all their plans an additional $35,000,000 would have been presented to England to meet an imaginary emergency, and the Federal government would have secured $1,250,000 to spend in the provinces on highway work at its own sweet will. Had the Senate not stood between the people and the government Canada's expenditure this year would have been $287,872,499. Every man, woman and child in the country would have been taxed $40; every head of a family of five would have had to contribute $200 to the glorification of the Tory-Nationalist government.

AN EXTRAORDINARY GROWTH.

In 1911, the last full year of the Laurier Government, the total disbursements on every count were only $122,861,250. Taking the then population at 7,000,000 this means $18 a head, or $90 for a family of five, and it was denounced by Mr. Borden as criminal extravagance. Every man, woman and child would have been taxed $32, almost doubled the expenditure within two years, without undertaking a single work of national magnitude. The expenditure for the last year of the Laurier government was approximately $18.50 per head; after two years of Borden and Rogers it has grown to an estimate for the present year of $32. Defeating Laurier will cost the head of every average household in Canada for this year alone $62.50.

DEPARTMENTAL EXTRA. VAGANCE.

Public Works and Militarism Responsible for Much Waste.

What is causing this immense increase in national expenditure can easily be seen by looking through a few departmental records. In 1911 the Laurier Government spent $8,621,431 on public works. This year Hon. Robert Rogers proposes to spend something like $28,000,000.

In 1911 the Laurier Government voted to spend on Militia and Defence $6,808,651. In 1912 Hon. Sam Hughes increased this to $7,599,600; for 1913 it was $8,312,850, and for this year the amount voted was $10,479,065, with a trifle of about $500,000 in supplementaries, previously overlooked. And this does not account for over fifty drill halls, and other military buildings with which Col. Hughes proposes to decorate this peaceful land, at an average of about $25,000 each.

Every department shows the same record of reckless extravagance. Nowhere is there any idea of using Canada's abounding revenues to reduce her debt or give the citizens any relief from the burden of taxation which is hidden in the high cost of living.

WHAT THE SENATE DID.

How they Improved Highways Aid Bill in Public Interest.

In view of the continued rejection of the Senate's amendment to the Highways Aid Bill by the Borden Government it is important to note exactly what the Senate did. They approved the principle of the Bill, and passed Clauses 1 to 5, which plan for the voting and expenditure of money. They struck out Clause 6, which provides—

"The Minister (of railways) with the approval of the Governor-in-Council and upon such terms and conditions as are prescribed by Order-in-Council, may undertake the construction of any new highway or bridges in any province, and may expend in such improvement or construction the whole or part of the sums voted by Parliament for such subsidy to that Province; Provided however that the Minister shall first obtain the necessary authority from the Legislature of such Province and the consent of the Lieut-Governor in Council."

It is plain that this clause was devised for the express purpose of giving the Minister of Railways highly dangerous powers to spend Dominion money on any Province the government wishes to particularly favor, or any district in any province where the spending of government money may be desirable in the governments' interests, but not in the public interests. It is also equally plain that it is contrary to the British North America Act, which provides that all highways are absolutely under provincial jurisdiction. The Tories are at their old tricks, using gilded bait to tempt the provinces in to giving up part of their rights to the centralizing ambitions of the Dominion government and accumulating government funds in their own hands for use in the constituencies.

PROTECT THE PROVINCE

Instead of this clause the Senate inserted the following:—

"The sum of money voted in any year to be expended under this Act shall be the unblinking selenium eye will keep an unrelenting watch on his safe or his silver chest.

But the eye possesses a failing common to all mechanical substitutes for human agencies. It cannot distinguish between right and wrong. When it sees a light it sounds the alarm regardless of what that light may be. The inventor explains that during the day-time the mechanical eye is closed by a lid, but he does not explain what occurs in the early morning. Presumably the alarm is sounded at "peep" of dawn. But perhaps he has some clock mechanism to close the eyelids just before daybreak.

The Letter A.

The letter A is in Hebrew called aleph, an ox, and the Phoenician character which represents this sound was originally a picture of an ox head; hence the name. The right hand stroke of the A represents the top of the head, the other down stroke the left side, and a line, since fallen out of use, represented the right side of the head, while in very old Phoenician manuscripts two dots above for eyes and two below for nostrils rendered the resemblance complete.

How To Tear Carpet Rags.

Snip across the end of the cloth for as many strips as desired. Tear each one down just far enough to make it easy to grasp the ends. Take every other strip end in one hand and the alternate ones in the other, and pull vigorously. In this way a wide piece of cloth can be torn into strips with only one motion.

The Treacherous Lioness.

"Lionesses are far more dangerous than lions," said an animal trainer. "Their tempers are more uncertain. They are more treacherous. They are more wily. If a lion is in a bad humor he shows it. He growls and snarls and lashes his sides. You know what is in the wind and prepare accordingly. But a lioness in a bad humor is as affectionate as a girl. She brushes, purring, against your leg, and she minds you with the joyous alacrity of a good fox terrier. Then, as soon as your back is turned, whizz—a yellow streak shoots through the air, and you are on your back, and she is at your throat. With all the cat tribe it is the same."

Imitation Diamonds.

No imitation of the diamond is so brilliant as the skillfully cut piece of the kind of lead glass known in the trade as "paste." The play of color in these counterfeits is often very beautiful, but the glass "diamond" possesses no luster, this term being applied to the light reflected from the top surface of the gem. The flashes of light and color that give brilliancy come from the interior, being thrown from the rear surface of the stone.

The glass diamond is soft and is attacked chemically by a number of things with which it comes in contact by wear, for both of which reasons it soon becomes dulled.

our government. The patent is quite broad minded in its ideas or ought to be patented.

The chewing gum locket was patented Jan. 1, 1889, by Christopher W. ertson of Somerville, Tenn. It resembles the ordinary one with used to carry the sweetheart's picture but instead of a photograph it is with a porcelain glass interior. This the chewing gum is neatly a for future reference.

The tree supported elevated is the idea of Jerome Orlay of sche, Belgium, and his patent were granted March 19, 1912. It to build a railroad of this type is necessary to do is to plant tr both sides of the street and have lean toward one another until cross at the top. In the crotch provided it would be possible stringers to which cross-ties, etc., be attached and to build your railroad running under shady br and supported by living wood. tional poles, if desired, may be between the trees, and part of the provides for running a double road, with one car above the other.

One of the most provident inventors is George C. Hale of Kansas City who was granted a patent Aug. 4 for a combination suspenders as escape. Woven into the fabric of apparently innocent galluses, Mr. patent provided for a string t with some form of chemicals, s it would not easily burn. When on the upper floors of a burning ing the man provided with the escape suspenders had only to pull end of this string, which immediately unfurled itself for about 200 feet. Then he could let down string to the street, have it attached to a substantial rope, pull the rope to his floor, attach the rope to point and escape from the building!

Speaking of suspenders, Mark Twain was the grantee of a suspenders patent. In December, 1871, he patented an improvement in adjustable attachable straps for garments. Describing his invention Samuel L. Twain classifies it as "an adjustable detachable elastic strap for vest straps" and claims as its novel feature the fact that it is provided with devices for adjusting its length and buttonholed ends for direct attachment to the clothing. The device consists merely of two pieces of leather with buttonholes at the ends, hook with different holes for adjusting the length.

An ingenious contrivance has been patented by an Oregon man by which the family cat can be used as live bait for catching lynxes.

ewing gum locket and an elevated road supported by the branches of trees are among the devices that have been granted patents by the government. The patent office is broad minded in its ideas of what to be patented.

ewing gum locket was patented in 1889, by Christopher W. Rob of Somerville, Tenn. The locket holds the ordinary one which is to carry the sweetheart's picture, instead of a photograph it is lined with a porcelain glass interior. Into gars, panthers, and the like, without danger to the cat and with great certainty that the wild animals will be trapped. The patent consists of a sharp stake with a point at the top, intended to make it uncomfortable for pussy to rest there permanently, and a ring over the stake, to which by a light chain is attached a collar or harness, which fastens around the cat's neck. In a circle about the stake are set a half dozen steel traps, securely chained to the ground in such a way that an animal caught in one of them could not quite reach the stake. Drive the stake somewhere out in the wilds where lynxes and panthers do congregate, put pussy into the collar and await results. Being a live bait, she will yowl. This will attract the animals, but when they come she will immediately escape by running up the stake, which is covered with cloth to give her claws a chance. The animal, while prancing around at the foot of the stake, will prance into one of the steel traps and get caught. Pussy will come down from the pointed top and serve as bait to attract more animals.

The acme of ingenuity, however, has been reached by George Hogan in his noiseless alarm clock, patented June 9, 1908. The Hogan device consists of a jar of water on a shelf above the bed.

THE WORLD OF INSECTS

TINY CREATURES MAKE UP A COSMOS OF THEIR OWN.

Cannibals and Torturers, Robbers, Slavers and Their Victims Constitute Tiny Civilizations With Rules Very Much Like Those of Men—The Termite Is Eaten Before He Gets a Chance To Die.

As there are over 300,000 species of insects—each with some queer, interesting ways—it is hard to select a few for special mention. Scientists say that bees and ants are the most intelligent citizens of the insect world. Bees are fairly well known, but Termites, often called white ants, are almost strangers.

They are commonest in Africa, Australia and South America, where they build red-earth houses large enough to form a part of the landscape. These great hills are often covered with vegetation, and are inwardly pierced in all directions by corridors leading to the chambers of the tenants. The king and queen who rule, occupy a royal suite, situated below that of their subjects. They are protected by "soldiers," who have huge heads and murderous jaws, which in case of attack move up and down like a pair of shears, snipping off the legs and heads of enemies with great rapidity.

Sad to say, the Termites are cannibals! When any member of the colony shows signs of illness, he is immediately eaten—before he has a chance to die a natural death. The cast-off skin of every member is also eagerly seized. When one is ready to moult, he is instantly surrounded and assisted by a crowd of friends and relatives, who devour his old clothes as fast as they leave his body.

If a quarrel breaks out under the home roof, the majority interfere and part the disturbers. It has been proved that the Termites have voices and make various sounds—presumably conversation—although it is too delicate for the human ear to catch.

Although Termites usually pass for ants, they do not practice the remarkable ant habit of keeping slaves and domestic animals. One species of ant will rob the nest of another species and carry home the helpless papae, or eggs. When these mature, the robbers cease all work, forcing the little strangers to make nests, bring food and even feed them. In case of a change of residence, the slaves carry their owners to it, in their mouths!

Ants also keep honey-cows. These are tiny insects called Aphides, who produce one drop of honey regularly. The ants build stalls of earth around the leaf on which the cows happen to be feeding, and when they have eaten enough to make a full "honey-pot" they are milked and relieved of their burden by the ants, who are ravenously fond of sweet fluid.

There are many kinds of beetles who make their home with the ants, and among the queerest is the Lepidoptera, or fleet-foot, who looks like a good louse with a tail like a fish. This gentleman lives by stealing food from the ants as they are passing it to each other. His long legs enable him to escape before the outraged family can overtake him. But if he is overtaken, as sometimes happens, he is killed on the spot.

Another ant guest is a tiny mite with a big name (antennophorus) which attaches itself to the ant's head or abdomen, and lives there until it

From 40 to 50 Years of Age. How It May Be Passed in Safety.

So. Wellington, B.C.—"For a year during the Change of Life I was all run down. I was really too weak to walk and was very despondent and thought I was going to die, but after taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier my health and strength returned. I am very thankful to you and praise your medicine.

I have advised several women who suffered as I did to try your remedies. You may publish this if you wish."—Mrs. DAVID R. MORRIS, South Wellington, Vancouver Island, B.C.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. We know of no other medicine which has such a record of success as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For more than 30 years it has been the standard remedy for woman's ills such as inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains and nervous prostration, and we believe it is unequalled for women during the period of change of life.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

SAVING HINTS.

How Thrifty Housewives May Fight Cost of Living.

The present high cost of living reminds one of the housewife who, looking at Niagara Falls for the first time, said, "Oh, this big splash of water reminds me that I left the kitchen tap running." Like this visitor to the falls many women keep a weather eye out for big economies and leave the tap of little savings running. Taking care of clothes is a means of much saving to the woman who will spend time and thought upon her wardrobe. Every woman knows the ruinous sums it costs each season to have her evening frocks, light suits and silk blouses and other unwashable materials cleaned. Where gasoline is possible as a renovator she may sometimes try the experiment of doing a little of her own cleaning, but it is seldom successful, and it is as hard to lose the odor of gasoline as it is to acquire the odor of sanctity. Also it is dangerous.

Therefore the knowledge of some simple methods of dry cleaning that can be done at home and that leave no trace of the process would save many a precious dollar to the woman who is running to the limit of her allowance for dress. The materials required are very simple—fuller's earth, black soap, borax, soda ash, and

The acme of ingenuity, however, has been reached by George Hogan in his noiseless alarm clock, patented June 9, 1908. The Hogan device consists of a jar of water on a shelf above the bed, from which runs a hose, which on retiring the sleeper attaches to his leg.
By means of the ordinary alarm clock a valve is opened at any hour that may be desired, when water begins to flow against the leg of the victim.
This does not disturb the neighbors and is sure to awaken the sleeper, a satisfactory arrangement for everybody.

for patents is perpetual motion. For many years aerial navigation was in-since then the doors have been opened to flying machine patents.—Technical

TURNED INTO STONE.

Petrified Objects Are Common In Regions Where Limestone Prevails.

Petrified objects are found in a great many sections of the world, most of them in sections where limestone is prevalent.

Petrified wood is the most common. Bits of wood, pieces of bark and small twigs are the more common, but in some places whole logs are found, and these are so well petrified as to show the bark as perfect as when the tree was growing. Different kinds of wood petrify. It depends more on the amount of lime than on the quality of timber.

In Arizona whole trees are petrified, and, in fact, whole forests have been turned into stone, and some wonderful specimens are to be found there. The petrified trees are sometimes cut up and converted into various articles of value.

Petrified moss is found in many places. It is very beautiful. Petrified grasses, leaves of trees and petrified nuts and fruits have been discovered in some places. Petrified reptiles and small animals have also been found.

Cobs from which the grains of corn have been removed make rather curious petrifications. One of the most curious found is that of a piece of honeycomb turned into solid stone, but showing every honey cell perfectly shaped and equally distributed just as the honey bees had built it. If the comb had contained honey the water had dissolved that, for the cells were empty.

Petrified human remains are not uncommon. In some of the cemeteries in sections where limestone prevails in abundance bodies have been lifted to move them to other cemeteries, and they were found to be turned to stone.

from the ants as they are passing it to each other. His long legs enable him to escape before the outraged family can overtake him. But if he is overtaken, as sometimes happens,
he is killed on the spot.

Another ant guest is a tiny mite with a big name (antennophorous) which attaches itself to the ant's head or abdomen, and lives there until it happens to see a better "tenement." Horny cups on its feet, filled with a sticky substance, enable it to stick fast and an ant will carry two or three of these mites without objection.

Near at hand may also be found tiny, blind cockroaches, thriving on a mushroom growth. They frequently mount the ant's back and ride for a long time. As far as scientists can discover there is no reason for this except recreation.

Passing to the fly family among the most curious specimens is the Hippo-boscidæ, or Bird Tick, who begins life with wings, and elings to the bodies of birds until old enough to migrate to something larger, such as a deer. When they find a home that exactly suits them, they prepare to remain permanently by biting off their wings so they cannot leave it.

The Apoccephalus, Sit-o'-my-head, is a very lively fly who darts after big black ants and lays eggs on their necks. When hatched the grub bores into the ant's head and eats the brain. When the head drops off, the maggot inside strolls around carrying his residence with him, like a snail. Soon, however, he becomes tired, turns into a chrysalis and sleeps. When the nap is over, he comes out a fully-developed, wicked little fly, like his parents.

The hump-back flies (Pharidæ) are hatched in bee-hives and live on the eggs and larvae there. When mature, they pounce like hawks upon moths, beetles, butterflies and grasshoppers—but their favorite prey is bees. They have a hard, tubular beak that is used to lacerate their victims;
after which they suck the body dry.
They are inhuman little murderers, who work industriously all day. Sometimes the ground in the vicinity of a hive is strewn with empty bee-shells, and there is nothing that bees, or beekeepers, dread more than this so-called Robber fly. It is a question whether the bees are not quick enough to sting, or whether the fly is immune from the poison.

The Tachina flies—and other kinds —hand over their victims to torture,
in the hands of the next generation.
They lay their eggs on caterpillars and locusts, and stick them there with a gluey substance. A maggot hatches and bores its way through the skin into the body, where it lives by slowly consuming some vital organ that finally causes the death of the caterpillar and in time—releases another fly.

Regularity—

of the bowels is an absolute necessity for good health. Unless the waste matter from the food which collects there is got rid of at least once a day, it decays and poisons the whole body, causing biliousness, indigestion and sick headaches. Salts and other harsh mineral purgatives irritate the delicate lining of the bowels. Dr. Morse's Indian Root gasoline as it is to acquire the odor

Therefore the knowledge of some simple methods of dry cleaning that can be done at home and that leave no trace of the process would save many a precious dollar to the woman who is running to the limit of her allowance for dress. The materials required are very simple—fuller's earth, block magnesite, boracic talcum powder, flour and borax or even plain cornmeal. The first three, can be bought by the ounce or pound from any druggist, and the others are always in the pantry or store chest.

For a white silk blouse it is perfectly safe to use either the meals or talcum powder. A white serge suit for example can be very successfully cleaned by putting it into a dry, clean tub and covering it over with cornmeal slightly salted. The suit can be rubbed with the hands exactly as if it were in soapsuds, the most energetic rubbing naturally being given to the spots which are most soiled. After it has been thoroughly gone over the meal should be thrown out and the gown put back into the tub and covered over with clean meal. It should be left there for two days, with a cloth over the tub to keep out the dust, and then shaken out and brushed with a perfectly clean brush.

The Joints of the Acrobat.

Everybody has seen the acrobat dislocate his joints. By means of flexions and contortions that have been practiced from a very early age the spinal cord has been converted into what is to all intents and purposes a rubber tube. He can throw his head low enough to put his neck between his legs and bend his back into a bow almost as complete as that of the fireside cat. A medical man has classified these dislocations and says that the digestion of such men is almost always perfect, provided they do not carry their exercises to excess.
He thinks the circulation is stimulated to a degree where waste products of the body are more easily eliminated.

Swiss Schools.

One of the most attractive features of the Swiss schools is the cordial personal relation that exists between teacher and pupil. There is nothing of the military in the discipline of the school—no lining up, no marching to classes. When the children go to the classroom they shake hands with the teacher, greeting him as if they had not seen him for a long time and are really glad to see him. The whole relation is one of charming naturalness and kindness on both sides.

How To Treat Shrunken Woollens.

Wool union suits which have shrunk until it is an impossibility to squeeze into them may be made wearable by ripping the shoulder seams and fitting in a three-cornered piece, one corner of which should be placed at the end of the shoulder seam at the top of the sleeve. This will give as much length to the body of the garment as the size of the piece set in.

One of the few places to repeal the Local Option by-law last January was the town of Acton. During the time of the campaign for its repeal, the Repeal Committee made many specious promises to "see that the provisions of the Liquor License Act were carried out and to take steps to have every man found on the streets the worse for liquor promptly arrested." It is a little more than a month now since the Local Option law ceased its operation in Acton and according to one of the papers, there have been most disastrous results. We are told that in the twenty-nine days after the law went out of force, although only one bar-room had been given a license, there have been as many convictions on the charge of drunk and disorderly in the magistrate's court as there were during the whole three years of Local Option regime; while drunken men are seen staggering out of the hotel, despite the License Laws' provisions against supplying men under the influence of liquor with more. Magistrates and inspectors are in receipt of letters from wives (who, of course, had no vote in repealing the Local Option By-Law) to this effect: "Please have my husband placed on the Indian List at once. He is drunk every day now." This ought to be an object lesson as to the desirability of Local Option and its effectiveness.

Barnum and Bailey Circus.

The Barnum and Bailey Greatest Show on earth and newly added spectacle of "Cleopatra" will exhibit in Kingston, on Wednesday, June 25th. The spectacle in itself is an attraction that should fill the big tent at each performance and draw thousands of visitors from the surrounding districts. It is beyond question the greatest production of its kind ever seen in America. The world's most skillful scenic artists, costumers, property builders, chorus directors and stage managers were engaged to mount the production. A stage bigger than a hundred ordinary theatres was built and made portable so that it can be conveyed from town to town and erected each day in the main tent. The circus proprietors have thus made it possible for those who live in contributory towns, even farmers and their families, to see the magnificent worldless play that is an immense attraction in the largest cities. It is enacted with a cast of 1,230 actors, a grand opera chorus, an orchestra of 100 soloists, a ballet of 350 dancing girls, 650 horses, five herds of elephants, caravans of camels, and a trainload of special devices, costumes and scenery and electrical mechanism for producing such effects as lightning, thunder, sand storms on the desert, volcanoes in action, sunrise, floods and mirages. The realism of the scenery is perfect. It is as though the audience was looking into the streets of Alexandria in the day of Ptolemys. The streets throb with their strange cosmopolitan life. In the middle distance flows the Nile, the mighty pyramids and the Sphinx looking down from past ages. Beyond them stretch endless wastes of sand. The laureats of a dead race speak from forgotten tombs. The walls of Time fall down, and we see the court of Cleopatra during its years of extravagance and revelry, and hear the story of the betrayal of Rome and the undoing of Marc Antony, told in a vividly realistic way. REV FRASER BELL GOES TO ALBION

Last Sunday a week ago Rev. Fraser Bell went to Albion, Ill. preached for the congregation church morning and evening, close of the evening service he voted unanimously to extend to invitation to become their pastor. Last Sunday morning Rev. Bell tendered his resignation to his congregation here. The congregation were anxious to hold Rev. Bell but inasmuch as Albion offered better opportunity to care for the small girls they accepted his resignation.

Rev. Bell will not only preach will also work in the college. I probably take charge of the gymnasium and physical culture work his arrival, also Theology.

Mr. Bell is well equipped to work and has had much experience. During his university work at V University he made his way, work in physical culture in the C. A. in Toronto.

Rev. Bell came to the past Trinity congregational church city October 1st 1911. He has very popular minister and his has had an ere of prosperity under leadership. He is an able preacher and a good pastor. He was a Canadian by birth and was educated his first preaching in Canada, graduated from Newburgh Acton from there to Napanee Col Institute. He then entered V University Toronto and then P. H. B. from Washington D. correspondence. Before entering ministry he took a course in T Bible School. After finishing education he preached one year in Canada, four years in Michigan, years in New York and has the church here nearly two years. A REMARKABLE CO-INCIDENCE.

About twenty years ago Rev. B. Hines was called to the past of Trinity Congregational church Metropolis. After having served church for a time he received the pastorate and college work Albion. While he had the church under consideration Mrs. Hines leaving two small girl children was buried at Metropolis. Bro. Bell went to Albion and engaged in college work. He is there now President of the college.

Rev. Bell came to Trinity Congregational Church in October, 1911. January, 1912, he received a call to Albion. While he had the church under consideration Mrs. Bell leaving two small girls. She and Hines are buried on the same lot cemetery in Metropolis.

Rev. Bell has now accepted a call to Albion and will soon remove with his two little daughters.

It is the earnest hope of his friends here that the work of the church and school may be as successful as has been the work of Rev. Hines and that when Bro. Bell is called to a greater field that Rev. Fraser Bell may become President of Albion College.

An Old Time Playful Prisoner.

Over a century ago there occurred in London what the Annual Register called "a most unparalleled atrocity." It was only the theft of a pocket handkerchief from a pocket, but the circumstances of the deed explain the vehemence of this denunciation. Four men were on their trial for assaulting a man in his house at Ponder's End, putting him in fear and stealing from him, and one of them relieved the tedium of the trial, which lasted eight hours, by picking the pocket of one of the turnkeys as he stood in the dock. An official had the presence of mind to order the restoration of the handkerchief, and the prisoner had enough presence of mind to obey "with the most careless indifference," but the court, we read, "were horror struck." Justice, however, pulled itself together sufficiently to sentence all four men to death.

The Changing Death Rate.

The last generation has progressed remarkably in saving the babies, but has let the middle aged people die. Below the age of ten the death rate has been diminishing. Above the age of forty the death rate has been increasing, at least in America. No increase is reported from Europe.

Intemperance in eating, drinking and working, especially working, is the most probable explanation of this peculiar and unfortunate mortality.

FORCE OF GRAVITY

It Makes You Fall Faster In Than In Mexico City.

Did you know that you "droop" in Massachusetts than in For instance, if you were to fall a twenty story building in Boston would descend a lot faster than fell from the same height in Mexico.

The principle of this is quite even if it does seem a bit start is merely that as one goes toward equator the force of gravity goes and less and the quickness of of a falling body slower; and doubtless you would feel just comfortable falling that distant one place as in another and the would be just as disastrous, times and things in which the ence is not only perceptible, but a notice.

In Boston if you were to fall zonally with a rifle and your gun sixteen feet from the ground, let fired would reach the ground second after it had left the rifle if you were to take that same the City of Mexico and fire it same distance from the earth, it take one and one-half seconds to the ground.

So it is easy to see how when ing in different parts of the is necessary to calculate time this same shifting standard of ing.—New York World.

According to old fishermen, what might be called neutral or, rather, neutral water, in where there is no use of trying a catch unless it be that some with a piscatorial brainstorm is bait as an insane human might a redhot stove.

This neutral water is the the river where its flow encounter saline impregnation of the sal of the bay or ocean into which ly empties. With the ebb and of the tide the salt water of runs up into the river for miles on the reverse the fresh water ascends several miles again to leading into the salt sea.

There is a midway between and fresh water points, however seldom shifts. Around the way shad and blue and other ster fish, if they visit at all, will on the ocean side. Bell came to the pastorate of the congregational church in this October 1st 1911. He has been a popular minister and his church had an era of prosperity under his leadership. He is an able preacher, good pastor. He was a Canadian birth and was educated and did not preaching in Canada. He graduated from Newburgh Academy from there to Napanee Collegiate. He then entered Victoria University Toronto and then got his B. from Washington D. C. by sponsorship. Before entering the ministry he took a course in Toronto School. After finishing his ministry he preached one year in Ia, four years in Michigan, five in New York and has served church here nearly two years.

MARKABLE CO-INCIDENCE. Just twenty years ago Rev. Frank Hines was called to the pastorate of Trinity Congregational church at Metropolis. After having served the church for a time he received a call to pastorate and college work at Metropolis. While he had the matter under consideration Mrs. Hines died of two small girl children. She was buried at Metropolis. Bro. Hines to Albion and engaged in church college work. He is there yet and president of the college.

Bell came to Trinity Congregational Church in October, 1911. On May, 1912, he received a call to Metropolis. While he had the matter under consideration Mrs. Bell died of two small girls. She and Mrs. Hines are buried on the same lot in the cemetery in Metropolis.

Bell has now accepted the call to Metropolis and will soon remove there his two little daughters.

It is the earnest hope of his many friends here that the work with the high school may be as successful as has been the work of Frank B. Hines, and that when Bro. Hines is called to a greater field that Bro. E. R. Bell may become President of the College.

ONTARIO POLITICS

Word comes of the resignation of the Hungarian Cabinet because a member of Parliament proved that the Prime Minister had accepted money at the conclusion of certain contracts with the Bank of Hungary. The report states: "Although the Premier derived no personal pecuniary benefit from this money which was devoted to the promotion of political party purposes, from a legal and moral point of view it is not permissible for a Minister to accept any money from any concern doing business with the State."

In Ontario the Minister of the Crown admits that he received money from a Government contractor and what was worse, from one who had a claim pending against the Government. The Prime Minister admits that he was told about this transaction and yet the money was not returned.

In Hungary the Government resigned. In Ontario the Government would not resign. Wait, however, until the general elections and then the public will have its say.

MEETINGS THIS WEEK.

June 11. Liberal Nominating Convention for North Gray at Owen Sound. Chief speaker, Dr. Jas. McQueen, M.P.P., North Wentworth.

June 12. Liberal picnic at Aylmer for East Elgin, Oxford, Middlesex and surrounding counties. Leading speakers, N. W. Rowell, K.C., M.P.P., Hon. George Graham, M.P., F. F. Pardee, M.P., and Hon. Mackenzie King.

June 13. Liberal picnics at Erin near Mount Forest in East Wellingto. Leading speakers, Hon. Mackenzie King, Wm. Proudfoot, K.C., M.P.P., Udney Richardson, M.P.P.

This is quite an array. Taken together with the big Conservative rally held in Markdale on June 3rd where Hon. I. B. Lucas and Sir James Whitney spoke, and the Proudfoot demonstration in Goderich, it is easy to see that as far as Ontario is concerned June is not only the month of roses but of political meetings.

CONGRATULATIONS.

Congratulations are in order for Hon. I. B. Lucas who is now officially installed as Provincial Treasurer.

MUTE ABOUT PROUDFOOT.

At the Markdale meeting not one word was spoken by Sir James Whitney or any of the speakers in reference to the Whitney-Hanna charges, and this too although Mr. Proudfoot had asked a series of 15 direct questions to be answered by the Prime Minister. If Sir James cannot answer these questions satisfactorily, the days of the Whitney Government are numbered and its defeat is inevitable. Will the questions be answered? Will the issue be faced? are important queries at this time in Provincial politics.

SIR JAMES AND ANTI-TREATING.

There has been quite a widespread comment, mostly unfavorable on Sir James Whitney's attitude to temperance shown at the Markdale picnic. True, he advocated anti-treating, but the reason was too obvious.

At the recent session of the Legislature the Prime Minister and the Government had every opportunity to put through anti-treating legislation. In 1912 they had declared such a step to be necessary, and had painted with bright colors the advantages which accrue. When it came to putting into law what they had talked about they drew back and did nothing.

Now, after the session has closed and there are nine months of quiet ahead, Sir James reintroduces his anti-treating talk. To listen to the conver-

Repudiation of Christ a Growing Sin, Says Pastor Russell.

Faith is Waning—Learned and Rich Already Faithless—Common People Rapidly Becoming So—Rich Substitute Pleasures—Poor Have No Substitute—Old Creeds No Longer Endurable.

Dallas, Texas, June 8.—Pastor C. T. Russell spoke twice here to-day. We report his discourse to Bible Students. The text was: "If we deny Him, He will deny us." (2 Timothy 2:12.) He said: Great riches have come to the world within the past sixty years, especially to Europe and America. Instead of the hearts of the prosperous uplifting with gratitude to God, the tendency seems to be away from God, and especially away from His Son and from all thought of a share in His redemptive work, or a need for it. Business activities and prosperity have dwarfed the prospects of Messiah's Kingdom.

But with the growth of wealth have come sinner and more reasonable views of justice. The folly of accumulating money for others to squander has impressed itself. The rich of Europe and America are giving themselves more leisure in the prime of life, leaving opportunity for others to take their places in the commercial world. However, especially in America, there seems to be a restlessness, which leads into headlong pleasure-seeking.

None could wish that our great business men become sluggards. Our wish should be that their maturer years might be gratuitously devoted to the promotion of philanthropic plans for the aid of the lower classes. Doubtless millions of money would flow into such hands for disbursement along broadly economic lines. The motives would be trusted unless the projects were conducted on the highest planes of benevolence, with open accounts.

There is room for such benevolence in every land, but especially in countries under British and America control, where commercialism absorbs some of the ablest talent, leaving comparatively little opportunity for the less progressive. All over Great Britain and in nearly every state of the Union there are splendid opportunities for such work. Then there are the teeming millions of India, existing under conditions not fit for a good dog.

These are our brethren of the one blood, as St. Paul declares. None dispute the necessities of the case. The sympathetic are appalled at the money and labor necessary to cope with conditions. Heaven looks with interest to note how our showers of blessings affect our hearts.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, June 9.—Government estimates this afternoon regarding the 1911 crop of wheat proved to be almost exactly as figured out here in advance by experts. More interest was taken in a big decrease of the visible supply total.

The result was a firm close at a net advance of 1/4c to 1/2c. Corn finished a shade to 1/4c, oats with a gain of 1/4c to 1/2c, and provisions varying from a shade decline to 1/2c increase in cost.

The Liverpool market closed unchanged to 1/4d higher on wheat, and unchanged on corn.

CATTLE MARKETS

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, June 9.—The receipts of live stock at the Montreal Stock Yards for week ended June 7 were 1300 cattle, 600 sheep and lambs, 2300 hogs and 2000 calves. For sale this morning, 550 cattle, 200 sheep and lambs, 1600 hogs and 1600 calves.

The feature of the trade today was the weaker feeling which developed for cattle, and prices as compared with a week ago show a decline of 2 1/2c per hundred. The supply was not as large as this day week, but as packers in many cases are drawing their supplies largely from the Toronto market, the demand was somewhat limited. Trade on the whole was quiet. Sales of full loads of choice steers were made at $7.25, and the top price for picked lots of such was $7.50 per 100 pounds.

The trade in sheep and lambs was quiet on account of the small receipts, and prices were steady. Demand for calves was good, and as the offerings were not in excess of the requirements, prices were unchanged. A firm feeling prevails in the market for hogs, with a good demand from packers, and an active trade was done, with sales of selected lots at $10.05 to $10.75; sows at $9.15 to $9.25, and stags at $4 to $5 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7.25 to $7.50, do., medium, $5.50 to $5.60; do., common, $5 to $5.25; canners, $4.25 to $4.50; but-put through every opportunity to put through anti-treating legislation. In 1912 they had declared such a step to be necessary, and had painted with bright colors the advantages which accrue. When it came to putting into law what they had talked about they drew back and did nothing.

Now, after the session has closed and there are nine months of quiet ahead, Sir James reintroduces his anti-treating talk. To listen to the conversation of a good many people, temperance Conservatives included, Sir James would be well advised either to do something or to stop talking about what he doesn't do.

The reason for Sir James Whitney's reference to the subject at Markdale is still more apparent when it is remembered that at the Goderich meeting Mr. Rowell made a heavy attack on the Government on the temperance issue and directly charged that the Government had received large campaign contributions from the liquor interests for the East Middlesex elections. Mr. Rowell asked if perhaps the explanation of the abandonment of anti-treating was not to be found in these campaign funds secured from the liquor dealers.

Sir James, by his Markdale speech is also evidently making a bid for the Conservative temperance vote in the impending North Grey bye-election.

HIS FACIAL FOLIAGE.

Its Fate When Living Up to Its Dignity Was Suggested.

There is a comic artist on a New York paper who used to drink a little too much and a little too often. Also he wore a heavy brown beard of which he was very proud.

One morning he came to the office, showing signs of indiscretions the night before. His managing editor endeavored to appeal to his better judgment.

"Old man," he said seriously, "you're too old and too smart to be doing this sort of thing. It might be all right for a lot of smooth faced kids to spend the night over a bar, but you ought to remember that you're no longer a kid. You ought to try to live up to the dignity of that beard of yours."

This last suggestion seemed to throw the culprit into a brown study. He retired to his corner of the art room to think it over. In a few minutes he put on his hat and coat and slipped out, and he didn't come back for two weeks either. But within an hour after his departure the managing editor heard from him. A messenger boy brought in a pasteboard box such as florists use to pack flowers in. The managing editor cut the wrappings and opened the box.

There was nothing inside except a heavy brown beard, which had been newly sheared off the owner's face, with one lone rosebud reposing in the center of it.—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

Result Still In Doubt.

MELBOURNE, Australia, June 10.—The result of the federal election is still hanging in the balance, and the result may not be definitely known for some weeks. Returns from the interior are slow, as many districts get only one mail a fortnight, and some less than that.

Present figures indicate the defeat of the Labor Government by a close vote.

dispute the necessities of the case. The sympathetic are appalled at the money and labor necessary to cope with conditions. Heaven looks with interest to note how our showers of blessings affect our hearts.

The Responsibility of Knowledge and Riches.

Amongst the rich are many noble Christian hearts in perplexity as to what to do with their wealth. The Pastor's suggestions are based upon his observations in all parts of the world. He thinks that the Lord is pouring out wealth upon professed Christians to test them. From this viewpoint the world is under Divine inspection and God seems to be warning the prosperous that their present course is not wise.

Let us make no mistake, said the speaker earnestly. Pleasure-seeking is the trend of the whole world. God is being forgotten by both poor and rich, and the end of the lane is near—"a time of trouble such as never was."—Daniel 12:1.

With the awakening of true Christianity has come a substitute—Churchianity. For years Christian faith has been declining, under the attacks of Higher Criticism and Evolution, and the neutralizing influence of love of pleasure. One Bible doctrine after another has been dropped, while Churchianity has come forward as a form of godliness, but wholly destitute of its power.

Apparently the modern attempt to ignore doctrine has been a great mistake, which is now bearing its legitimate fruit in that very few Christians know definitely what the Bible teaches. The effect on the rising generation is disastrous. Seeing the doctrines of all denominations discredited, they perceive that the Bible is classed with the creeds. This is the alarming mistake. The sooner we are rid of our creeds, the better. But if we lose the Bible, are we not in danger of losing the very foundation of faith and hope beyond the present.

The Loss Is Greater to Some.

The average man needs the Gospel Message of hope in order to make the trials and sorrows of life endurable, in order that these may operate as to serve as lessons in character-development and produce a desire to be acceptable to his Creator, and to attain everlasting life.

The Pastor trusts that ministers may be encouraged to proclaim the Gospel of Hope beyond the grave—for the saintly a hope of joint-heirship with Christ in His Kingdom, and for the remainder of mankind a hope that they will receive only just punishment for sins proportionate to their wilfulness, and that the Lord's gracious arrangement is to grant all an opportunity of restoration to human perfection in a world-wide Eden—brought about by the Messianic Kingdom, which is even at the door.

Obedy the Dream.

Life is sometimes saved by dream warnings. Take the case of Dr. Harvey, the celebrated discoverer of the circulation of the blood. When he was a young man he set out from London to go to Padua, in Italy, the seat of the famous university where he wished to study. When he got to Dover the governor refused to let him enter his packet to cross the channel, but declined to give any reason. The next day news arrived at Dover that the packet had been lost with every soul on board. Then the governor explained his strange conduct. He said that he had had a dream of overwhelming force, in which he was forbidden to allow a young man, whose face appeared to him, to enter the boat. When Harvey presented himself the governor recognized the face seen in his dream.

Daniel O'Connell.

After a dinner at Lord Dungarvan's, Lady Morgan writes in her diary: I met the redoubtable Dan O'Connell. Dan is not brilliant in private life, not even agreeable. He is mild, silent, unassuming, apparently absorbed and an utter stranger to the give and take charm of good society. I said so to Lord Clanricarde, who replied: "If you knew how I found him this morning! His hall, the very steps of his door, crowded with his clientele. He had a word or a written order for each, then hurried off to the law courts, thence to the Improvement society and was the guest here today. Two hours before he was making that clever but violent speech to Mr. la Touch, and now no wonder that he looks like an extinct volcano."

SOME FAMOUS LAST RECORDS

The Journals of Captain See Long, Livingstone, Franklin and Others Are Mute Testimonials of Heroic Sacrifices For Science.

A peculiar and pathetic interest attaches to the last records of explorers, dying alone and unaided in wildernesses or in the depths of tropical jungles.

The diary kept by the gallant Captain Scott teems with tragic truth but it also has its beautiful heroic side. No more splendid record of magnificent self sacrifice has been recorded than the action of the able Captain Oates in seeking a death in the blizzard so as to be a burden on his surviving companions.

The world is richer in the possession of facts such as these, which in the last diaries of men dying in circumstances have always been gently sought and carefully treasured.

It was, for example, in order to recover the papers belonging to the lost arctic explorer Mylius Eriksen that Captain Mikkelsen spent two awful years among the solitudes of northeast Greenland, failed in his quest, and he as solitary companion came near to their own lives.

These journals of poor Erich are ever found, will doubtless a similarly stirring story to that behind by Scott. Until then it is only one record that closely follows it, and that is the diary left by American, De Long, who, with survivors from the arctic expedition ship Jeannette, perished amid the frozen wastes of northeastern Siberia the winter of 1881.

De Long's diary, which was preserved and has been published, is almost a duplicate in parts compared with that kept by poor Scott.

Only in De Long's case the truth was even more appalling than that of Scott's, for his party consisted of fewer than thirteen men, and they died from starvation and exposure. The last entry reads as follows: "A hundred and fortieth day—Boy Gortz died during the night. All men dying."

The gallant De Long was the only one with but one companion, Dr. Adams, the medical officer to the expedition, for the deaths of the other men have been previously recorded, and less than two last of the survivors that day or the next. At that point the journal ended abruptly.

By far the most dreadful tragedy of arctic exploration was the loss of the Franklin expedition, when the ill-fated officers and men of the two command ships, Erebus and Terror, in all, perished. Curiously enough many relics of the ill-fated commander Sir John Franklin recovered by search parties are now preserved in the museum at the Greenwich hospital, and

Furnace Grates on the Right Principle

This is only one of the many advantages of the Sunshine Furnace. Pay our agent a visit or write for the Sunshine booklet. It shows you why it pays to install this furnace.

Note the three surfaces, each of which will last as long as the ordinary one surface grate. A gentle rocking is usually all that's required but any clinkers happening to form are ground up by the massive teeth of the four grates with very little effort. The grate bars are so constructed that a volume of air passes freely to all parts of the fire.

By far the most disastrous arctic exploration was the loss Franklin expedition, when the 11 officers and men of the two ice ships, Erebus and Terror in all, perished. Curiously enough many relics of the ill commander Sir John Franklin recovered by search parties are now preserved in the museum; and to the Greenwich hospital, his diaries or personal papers ever found.

One single written record of the expedition remains to us. It is form of a sheet torn from a pocket diary, and these are the it contains: "April 25, 1848—Erebus and abandoned. Sir Franklin died on June 11, 1848 the total loss by deaths up to the nine officers and fifteen men."

This precious scrap of paper was covered in a cairn on King William Island in the year 1858. There is signature, but the handwriting, afterwaid identified as that of tain Fitzjames, one of Sir John's officers.

In the tragic history of exploration no briefer record than this exists disaster so appalling in its magnitude although Burke and Wills, who crossed Australia, left behind only a few tattered leaves from pocketbook to tell the story of they and their companions had down in the desert to die.

Of all the many valuable and interesting documents left behind by explorers, however, none can importance with the last journal David Livingstone, who died, we by hunger and privation, at the central Africa, May 1, 1873. were brought down to the coast together with his body, by his black "boys" and were published December, 1874.

WHEN VACATION COMES

STUDENTS HAVE A PENCHANT FOR BACKWOODS JOBS.

From the Time That the "Freshie" Hears of Wild Adventures in the Bush From His Sophomore Friend, Nothing Can Keep Him Out of the Back Country — Fraternities Find Jobs For Members.

Convocation has brought the college year to a close, and over three thousand students have been let loose from the University of Toronto. Ninety-five per cent. of them will scatter over Canada, holding down jobs and turning themselves into men. The distinguishing feature of Canadian college life is that the men and a large number of the women students either partially or wholly put themselves through. Whether wealthy or poor the popular thing to do is to get a job for the vacation.

Two things generally face students when spring comes round. They see a rough passage ahead of them through a labyrinth of examinations.
Scarcely less important is the job for the vacation. "What are you going to do next summer?" This is the topic of the hour for a month or two before exam. time. The "schoolmen" discuss the question in their draughting rooms, the med. in their dissecting room, the arts men in the library.

The fraternity houses become employment bureaus for the members—
a striking contrast to the American Fraternity, where the Ippi Yi Kia are more likely to be arranging the summer resort that they will patronize during the vacation. Canadian frat.
men use their connections to land smooth jobs. The graduate members have influence in the fraternity councils in proportion to their capability to furnish jobs, and they respond liberally. The fraternities usually look after their own members. The rest of the students have to dig for their own jobs and they get them, too.
They scatter themselves all over Canada. They find their way into many different industries and knock down from five to fifty dollars a week.

When the spoon-fed freshman gets acclimatized he falls in line with the prevailing idea and begins to hunt up a job for the vacation. The job his friend Bill, a seasoned soph., had last year, seems good to him. Bill was up north on a survey. He ate moose-meat, saw whisky-runners, shot rapids, worked with Indians, and has a first-class Ojibway vocabulary to make his tales more picturesque. The freshman hears this in the draughting room, in the dissecting room, in the library or in his frat. What these sophs. have been through makes a tremendous impression on him. "Honest, manly toil" never appeared to him in the same light before. He is probably up north now in the thick of it.

Then the junior comes back to his college halls in the fall. He is an experienced superior being. He hasn't made himself round-shouldered packing or pulling a chain. He sat in the shade all summer on the banks of a big northern river, watching its black waters passing on their way to Hudson Bay. He smoked many pounds of Hudson Bay Co. tobacco and incidentally used up a lot of fly oil. He was fire-rangin' for the Ontario Government.

A job in the wilds is the most attractive. Northern Ontario tales will soon be a part of the conversation among

We hear much of American dyspepsia, but there is one native race of America that is certainly not troubled in this respect. The Eskimo defies all the laws of hygiene and thrives. He eats until he is satisfied, but is said never to be satisfied while a shred of his feast remains unconsumed. His capacity is limited by the supply and by that only.

The Eskimo cannot make any mistake about the manner of cooking his food, since, as a rule, he does not cook
it. Nor, so far as the blubber or fat of the arctic animal is concerned, is the Eskimo concerned about his manner of eating it. Indeed, he may be said not to eat it at all. He cuts it into long strips an inch wide and an inch thick and then lowers the strip down his throat as one might lower a rope into a well.

Despite all this the Eskimo does not suffer from indigestion. He can make a good meal off the flesh and skin of the walrus, provision so hard and gritty that in cutting up the animal the knife must be continually sharpened.

The teeth of a little Eskimo child will, it is said by those in a position to know, meet in a bit of walrus skin as the teeth of an American child would meet in the flesh of an apple, although the hide of the walrus is from half an inch to an inch in thickness and bears considerable resemblance to the hide of an elephant. The eskimo child will bite it and digest it and never know what dyspepsia means.

A job in the wilds is the most attractive. Northern Ontario tales will earn a man a fine reputation amongst his fellow-students. The "call of the wilds" appeals especially to a city or town-bred student. These boys go where they get deep-chested and sun-burned via hard work and an open air life. Moreover, this is a good football preliminary—an important consideration.

The student from the country, however, has seen enough of the simple life in the bush at the back of his father's hundred acres. He may work as a book agent or go out west and take a summer school, but the majority go back home and work on their farms, telling strange stories of college life which make them heroes in their community. The theological students take missions up in Northern Ontario and in the west, and get very useful experience.

A whole lot of the students take to the sea-faring life. They "rush the growler" on our lake passenger boats.

School teaching is losing its grip as summer employment. The men can make more money at other things, and school teaching does not seem very exciting. The women students, however, supply the west with a large number of teachers for the summer schools.

You find very few Canadian college men going abroad in the summer, or dangling their heels in our summer resorts, telling fibs about college life. In this respect the Canadian university presents a striking contrast to the English and American universities. The students at Oxford and Cambridge belong to the leisured class in Britain. Their examinations are held in the fall. They study and travel during the vacation. They have no opportunity to work. The American college students are of course more like ours. The poorer ones work of necessity. The majority do not.

Vacation work is certainly a feature and a fine feature of Canadian college life. The boys get a job and make no bones about it. It's the proper thing to do. The sturdy independence of the Canadian student is characteristic, and it is this vacation work which produces this desirable type. This more than anything else turns the green freshman into the worldly, independent soph., and produces graduates who are real men.—Toronto Telegram.

CHAPTER VIII.

Only One Eye Closed.

"I AM—I was—Allan Fleming's private secretary," Wardrop began. "I secured the position through a relationship on his wife's side. I have held the position for three years. Before that I read law. For some time I have known that Mr. Fleming used a drug of some kind. Until a week ago I did not know what it was. On the 9th of May Mr. Fleming sent for me. I was in Plattsburg at the time, and he was at home. He was in a terrible condition—not sleeping at all—and he said he was being followed by some person who meant to kill him. Finally he asked me to get him some cocaine, and when he had taken it he was more like himself. I thought the pursuit was only in his own head. He had a man named Carter on guard in his house and acting as butler.

"There was trouble of some sort in the organization; I do not know just what. Mr. Schwartz came here to meet Mr. Fleming, and it seemed there was money needed. Mr. Fleming had to have it at once. He gave me some securities to take to Plattsburg and turn into money. I went on the 10th"—

"Was that the day Mr. Fleming disappeared?" the chief interrupted.

"Yes. He went to the White Cat and stayed there. No one but the caretaker and one other man knew he was there. On the night of the 21st I came back, having turned my securities into money. I carried it in a package in a small Russia leather bag that never left my hand for a moment. Mr. Knox here suggested that I had put it down and it had been exchanged for one just like it, but I did not let it out of my hand on that journey until I put it down on the porch at the Bellwood house while I tried to get in. I live at Bellwood with the Misses Maitland, sisters of Mr. Fleming's deceased wife. I don't pretend to know how it happened, but while I was trying to get into the house it was rifled. Mr. Knox will bear me out in that. I found my grip empty."

I affirmed it in a word.

"What was in the bag?" the chief asked.

Wardrop tried to remember.

"A pair of pajamas," he said, "two military brushes and a clothesbrush, two or three soft bosomed shirts, per-

"What was in the bag?" the chief asked.

The chief made no comment.

"Now, Mr. Knox, you heard no shot while you were in the hall?"

"There was considerable noise. I heard two or three sharp reports like the explosions of an automobile engine."

"You are right about the automobile," Hunter said. "The mayor sent his car away as I left to follow Mr. Wardrop. The sounds you heard were not shots."

"It is a strange thing," the chief reflected, "that a revolver could be fired in the upper room of an ordinary dwelling house, while that house was filled with people, and nobody hear it. Were there any powder marks on the body?"

"None," Hunter said.

The chief got up stiffly.

"Thank you very much, gentlemen. Hunter, I would like to see you for a few minutes."

I think Wardrop was dazed at finding himself free. As we walked to the corner for a car or cab, whichever materialized first, he looked back.

"I thought so," he said bitterly. A man was loitering after us along the street. The police were not asleep; they had closed only one eye.

The last train had gone. We took a night electric car to Wynton and walked the three miles to Bellwood. Neither of us was talkative, and I imagine we were both thinking of Margery and the news she would have to hear.

It had been raining, and once Wardrop turned around to where we could hear the detective splashing along. The detective was well behind, but after awhile Wardrop stood still, while I plowed along. They came up together presently, and the three of us trudged on, talking of immaterial things.

At the door Wardrop turned to the detective with a faint smile. "It's raining again," he said. "You'd better come in. You needn't worry about me. I'm not going to run away, and there's a couch in the library."

decided against it.

"Good night, dear," he said gently and went away.

The little familiarity made me wince. Every unattached man has the same pang now and then. I have it sometimes when Edith sits on the arm of Fred's chair, or one of the youngsters leaves me to run to "daddy." And one of the sanest men I ever met went to his office and proposed to his stenographer in sheer craving for domesticity, after watching the wife of one of his friends run her hand over her husband's chin and give him a reproving slap for not having shaved.

I was ready for bed when Wardrop rapped at my door. He was still dressed and had the leather bag.

"Look here," he said excitedly when I had closed the door, "this is not my bag at all. I never examined it carefully."

He held it out to me, and I carried it to the light. It was an ordinary eighteen inch Russia leather traveling bag, tan in color and with gold plated mountings. It was empty save for the railroad schedule that still rested in one side pocket.

"Don't you see?" he asked excitedly. "Whoever stole my bag had this one to substitute for it. If we can succeed in tracing the bag here to the shop it came from and from there to the purchaser we have the thief."

"There's no maker's name in it," I said after a casual examination. Wardrop's face fell, and he took the bag from me despondently.

"If you don't mind I'll leave it here," he said. "They'll be searching my room, I suppose, and I'd like to have the bag for future reference."

I have no idea how much later it was that I roused. I awakened suddenly and sat up in bed. There had been a crash of some kind, for the shock was still vibrating along my nerves. I got up and, lighting the candle, got into my raincoat in lieu of a dressing gown times of the morning paper, laid at Wardrop's plate. She must followed my eyes, for we reach it simultaneously. She was than I, and her quick eye caught name. Then I put my hand over heading, and she flushed with nation.

"You are not to read it now," I meeting her astonished gaze. "I let me have it. I promise you give it to you almost immediately."

"You are very rude," she said out relinquishing the paper. "a part of that. It is about n ther."

"Drink your coffee, please," I ed. "I will let you read it the my honor."

"How can you be so childish!" exclaimed. "If there is anything that paper that it will hurt I learn, is a cup of coffee going to it any easier?"

I gave up then, and, feeling evasion would be useless, I told what had happened, breaking news as gently as I could. I that he had been accidentally shot. "Accidentally!" she repeated.

first storm of grief over, she lifted head from where it had rested, arms and looked at me, scornful subterfuge. "He was murdered," the word I didn't have time to Murdered! And you sat back as it happen. I went to you in time you didn't do anything. No on anything."

I did not try to defend myself. could I? And afterward when I sl up and pushed back the damp stream of hair from her eyes she was reasonable.

"I did not mean what I said your not having done anything, said, almost childishly. "No one have done more. It was to her that's all."

But even then I knew she had ble in store that she did not su What would she do when she that Wardrop was under grave piclon? Between her dead father her lover, what?

I broke the news of her brother's death to Miss Letitia.

After that she apparently disun him from her mind, and we talk her sister. She regretted that the circumstances Jane would no in the family lot.

"We are all there," she said—"e of us, counting my sister Mary's band, although he don't properl long, and I always said we take him out if we were crowdle is the best lot in the Hopedale tery. You can see the shaft for miles in any direction."

We held a family council that ing around Miss Letitia's beddrop, who took little part in the ceedings and who stood at a w looking out most of the time; Ma on the bed, her arm around Miss tia's shriveled neck, and Hepple, acted as interpreter and shouted the old lady's ear such parts o conversation as she considered tial.

"I have talked with Miss Flen I said as clearly as I could, "an seems to shrink from seeing p The only friends she cares abou in Europe, and she tells me ther no other relatives."

Knox will bear me out in that. I found my grip empty."

I affirmed it in a word. "What was in the bag?" the chief asked.

Waldrop tried to remember. "A pair of pajamas," he said, "two military brushes and a clothesbrush, two or three soft bosomed shirts, perhaps a half dozen collars and a suit of underwear."

"And all this was taken, as well as the money?"

"The bag was empty, except for my railroad schedule."

"Go on, if you please," the detective said cheerfully.

I think Wardrop realized the absurdity of trying to make any one believe that part of the story. He threw up his head, as if he intended to say nothing further.

"Go on," I urged. If he could clear himself he must. I could not go back to Margery Fleming and tell her that her father had been murdered and her lover was accused of the crime.

"The bag was empty," he repeated. "I had not been five minutes trying to open the shutters, and yet the bag had been rifled. Mr. Knox here found it among the flowers below the veranda empty."

The chief eyed me with awakened interest.

"You also live at Bellwood, Mr. Knox?"

"No; I am attorney to Miss Letitia Maitland and was there one night as her guest. I found the bag as Mr. Wardrop described, empty."

The chief turned back to Wardrop. "How much money was there in it when you left it?"

"A hundred thousand dollars. I was afraid to tell Mr. Fleming, but I had to do it. We had a stormy scene this morning. I think he thought the natural thing—that I had taken it."

"He struck you, I believe, and knocked you down?" asked Hunter smoothly. Wardrop flushed.

"He was not himself, and—well, it meant a great deal to him. And he was out of cocaine. I left him raging, and when I went home I learned that Miss Jane Maitland had disappeared, been abducted, at the time my satchel had been emptied! It's no wonder I question my sanity."

"And then—to-night? the chief persisted.

"Tonight I felt that some one would have to look after Mr. Fleming. I was afraid he would kill himself. It was a bad time to leave while Miss Jane was missing. But when I got to the White Cat I found him dead. He was sitting with his back to the door and his head on the table."

"Was the revolver in his hand?"

"Yes."

"You are sure?" from Hunter. "Isn't it a fact, Mr. Wardrop, that you took Mr. Fleming's revolver from him this morning when he threatened you with it?"

Wardrop's face twitched nervously. "You have been misinformed," he replied, but no one was impressed by his tone. It was wavering, uncertain. From Hunter's face I judged it had been a random shot and had landed unexpectedly well.

"How many people knew that Mr. Fleming had been hiding at the White Cat?" from the chief.

"Very few—besides myself, only a man who looks after the clubhouses in the mornings and Clarkson, the cashier of the Borough bank, who met him there once by appointment."

er awhile wardrop stood suit, while I plowed along. They came up together presently, and the three of us trudged on, talking of immaterial things.

At the door Wardrop turned to the detective with a faint smile. "It's raining again," he said. "You'd better come in. You needn't worry about me. I'm not going to run away, and there's a couch in the library."

The detective grinned, and in the light from the hall I recognized the man I had followed to the police station two nights before.

"I guess I will," he said, looking apologetically at his muddy clothes. "This thing is only a matter of form, anyhow."

But he didn't lie down on the couch. He took a chair in the hall near the foot of the stairs, and we left him there with the evening paper and a lamp.

Wardrop looked so wretched that I asked him into my room and mixed him some whisky and water. When I had given him a cigar he began to look a little less hopeless.

"You've been a darned sight better to me than I would have been to you under the circumstances," he said gratefully.

"I thought we would better arrange about Miss Margery before we try to settle down," I replied. "Will you tell her about her father?"

"I believe it would come better from you," he said finally. "I am in the peculiar position of having been suspected by her father of robbing him, by you of carrying away her aunt and now by the police and everybody else of murdering her father."

"I do not suspect you of anything," I justified myself. "I don't think you are entirely open, that is all, Wardrop. I think you are damaging yourself to shield some one else."

His expressive face was on its guard in a moment. He ceased his restless pacing, pausing impressively before me.

"I give you my word as a gentleman I do not know who killed Mr. Fleming and that when I first saw him dead my only thought was that he had killed himself. He had threatened to that day. Why, if you think I killed him you would have to think I robbed him, too, in order to find a motive."

I did not tell him that that was precisely what Hunter did think. I evaded the issue.

"Mr. Wardrop, did you ever hear of the figures eleven twenty-two? You never heard Mr. Fleming use them?"

He looked puzzled.

"Probably," he said. "In the very nature of Mr. Fleming's position, we used figures all the time. Eleven twenty-two. That's the time the theater train leaves the city for Bellwood. Not what you want, eh?"

"Not quite," I answered noncommittally and began to wind my watch. He took the hint and prepared to leave.

He opened the door and stared ruefully down at the detective in the hall below. "The old place is queer without Miss Jane," he said irreverently. "Well, good night, and thanks."

He went heavily along the hall, and I closed my door. I heard him pass Margery's room and then go back and rap lightly.

"It's Harry," he called. "I thought you wouldn't worry if you knew I was in the house tonight."

She asked him something, for—"Yes, he is here," he said. He stood there for a moment, hesitating over something, but whatever it was, he said. "They'll be searching my room, I suppose, and I'd like to have the bag for future reference."

I have no idea how much later it was that I roused. I awakened suddenly and sat up in bed. There had been a crash of some kind, for the shock was still vibrating along my nerves. I got up and, lighting the candle, got into my raincoat in lieu of a dressing gown and prepared to investigate.

My door, which I had left open, I found closed. Nothing else was disturbed. The leather bag sat just inside as Wardrop had left it. Through Miss Maitland's transom were coming certain strangled and irregular sounds, now falsetto, now deep bass, that showed that worthy lady to be asleep. A glance down the staircase revealed Davidson.

"You didn't happen to be up there a little while ago, did you?" I questioned.

"No. I've been kept busy trying to sit tight where I am. Why?"

"Some one came into my room and awakened me," I explained.

"That's funny," he said. "Anything in the room disturbed?"

"Nothing, but some one had been in the room," I reiterated. "The door was closed, although I had left it open."

"I've got only one business here, Mr. Knox," he said in an undertone, "and you know what that is. But if it will relieve your mind I'll tell you that it was Mr. Wardrop and that to the best of my belief he was in your room, not once, but twice, in the last hour and a half."

"What could he have wanted?" I exclaimed. But with his revelation Davidson's interest ceased.

"Search me," he said and yawned.

I went back to bed. I deliberately left the door wide open, but no intrusion occurred. Once I got up and glanced down the stairs. For all his apparent drowsiness Davidson heard my cautious movements.

"Have you got any quinine?" he said. "I'm sneezing my head off."

But I had none. I gave him a box of cigarettes. I was roused by the sun beating on my face, to hear Miss Letitia's tones from her room across.

"Nonsense," she was saying querulously. "Don't you suppose I can smell? Do you think because I'm a little hard of hearing that I've lost my other senses? Somebody's been smoking."

"It's me," Hepple shouted. "I—"

"You?" Miss Letitia snarled. "What are you smoking for? That ain't my shirt; it's my"—

"I ain't smokin'!" yelled Hepple. "You won't let me tell you. I spilled vinegar on the stove."

"Vinegar!" said Miss Letitia, with scorn. "Next thing you'll be telling me it's vinegar that Harry and Mr. Knox carry around in little boxes in their pockets. You've pinned my cap to my scalp."

I hurried downstairs to find Davidson gone. My blanket lay neatly folded on the lower step, and the horse-hair chairs were ranged along the wall as before. I looked around anxiously for telltale ashes, but there was none save at the edge of the spotless register, a trace.

CHAPTER IX.

Breaking the News.

WARDROP did not appear at breakfast. Margery looked tired and white.

I saw the glaring head-of the old lady's ear such parts of conversation as she considered fit.

"I have talked with Miss Fleming as clearly as I could, 'as seems to shrink from seeing I. The only friends she cares about in Europe, and she tells me the no other relatives."

Hepple condensed this into a capsule and thrust it into Miss Letitia's ear. The old lady nodded.

"No other relatives," she corrected. "God be praised for that how."

"I was going to suggest," I said, "that my brother's wife would be too glad to help, and if Miss Fleming will go into town with me I am Edith would know just what she isn't curious, and she's very ble."

Margery threw me a grateful and grateful, I think, that I could stand how, under the circumstar stranger was more acceptable than rious friends could be.

"Mr. Knox's sister-in-law!" interjected Hepple.

"When you have to say the 'g' turn your head away," Miss Letitia rebuked her. "Well, I don't object. Knox's sister-in-law don't." She an uncanny way of expanding ple's tabloid speeches. "You call my white silk shawl to lay over body, but be sure to bring it back may need it for Jane."

If the old lady's chin quivered while Margery threw her arms about her she was mightily ashamed. But Hepple was made of weaker. She broke into a sudden storm and left the room to stick her head the door a moment after.

"Kidneys or chops?" she shouted most belligerently.

"Kidneys," Miss Letitia replied kind.

Wardrop went with us to the station at noon, but he left us there a brief remark that he would be up at night. After I had put Margery sent I went back to have a word with him alone. He was standing the train trying to light a cigar but his hands shook almost out of control, and after the fourth man gave it up. My minute for speed gone. As the train moved out he was walking back along the platform paying no attention to anything. Also I had a fleeting glimpse of a man loafing on a baggage trunk hat over his eyes.

I had arranged over the telephone that Edith should meet the train. It was a relief to see that she and Margery took to each other at once. We drove to the house immediately.

"Do you know that you have been to the office for two days?" Edith told me. "And do you know Hawes had hysterics in our front last night? You had a case in yesterday, didn't you?"

"Nothing very much," I said, I over her head. "Anyhow, I'm not I don't know when I'm going to need a vacation."

"The biggest case you ever had? Jack! The biggest retainer you had!"

"I've spent that," I protested. "A vacation, and you only back Pinehurst!"

"The girl was in trouble—is it Edith, I burst out. 'As would have done the same thing. 'Of course it's your own affair, said, not looking at me, 'and now knows I'm disinterested at

"I am not to read it now," I said, with my astonished gaze. "Please have it. I promise you I will give it to you almost immediately." "You are very rude," she said with withering the paper. "I saw you of that. It is about my father."

"Thank your coffee, please," I pleaded. "I will let you read it then, on your own."

"Can you be so childish?" she asked. "If there is anything in the paper that it will hurt me to is a cup of coffee going to make easier?"

"I gave up then, and, feeling that a would be useless, I told her what had happened, breaking the news as gently as I could. I said she had been accidentally shot. 'Identically!' she repeated. The form of grief over, she lifted her head where it had rested on her arm and looked at me, scornful of my fuge. 'He was murdered. That's what I didn't have time to read. And you sat back and let me. I went to you in time, and didn't do anything. No one did anything.'"

"I don't try to defend myself. How could I? And afterward when she sat down, I pushed back the damp strands from her eyes she was more comfortable. It did not mean what I said about not having done anything," she said almost childishly. "No one could have done more. It was to happen, all the same."

"Even then I knew she had trouble, that she did not suspect. I would she do when she heard Wardrop was under grave suspicion. Between her dead father and her, what?"

"Like the news of her brother-in-law's death to Miss Letitia. 'What?' she said, sitting up in bed. Hepple shook her pillows. 'It's the death for Allan Fleming. I said he would be hanged.'"

"That she apparently dismissed from her mind, and we talked of other. She regretted that under the circumstances Jane would not rest easily."

"I am all there," she said—"eleven counting my sister Mary's husband, although he don't properly belong. I always said we would be in it if we were crowded. It is the best lot in the Hopedale cemetery. You can see the shaft for two in any direction."

"I held a family council that morning around Miss Letitia's bed—Wardrop who took little part in the proceedings and who stood at a window; out most of the time; Margery, her arm around Miss Letitia's neck, and Hepple, who as interpreter and shouted into the lady's ear such parts of the conversation as she considered essential."

"I have talked with Miss Fleming," as clearly as I could, "and she to shrink from seeing people. My friends she cares about are few, and she tells me there are no relatives."

"I condensed this into a vocal"

You ruin the boys, both stomachs and dispositions, and I could use your room splendidly as a sewing room!"

"Edith! You abominable little liar!" She dabbed her eyes furiously with her handkerchief and walked with great dignity to the door. Then she came back and put her hand on my arm.

"Oh, Jack, if we could only have saved you this!" she said, and a minute later, when I did not speak, "Who is the man, dear?"

"A distant relative, Harry Wardrop," I replied, with what I think was very nearly my natural tone. "Don't worry, Edith. It's all right. I've known it right along."

"Pooh!" Edith returned sagely. "So do I know I've got to die and be buried some day. Its being inevitable doesn't make it any more cheerful." She went out, but she came back in a moment and stuck her head through the door.

"That's the only inevitable thing there is," she said.

That Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock the body of Allan Fleming was brought home and placed in state in the music room of the house.

Miss Jane had been missing since Thursday night. I called Hunter by telephone, and he had nothing to report.

I had a tearful message from Hawes late that afternoon, and a little after 5 I went to the office. I found him offering late editions of the evening paper to a couple of clients who were edging toward the door. His expression when he saw me was pure relief, the clients' relief strongly mixed with irritation.

I put the best face on the matter that I could, saw my visitors and, left alone, prepared to explain to Hawes what I could hardly explain to myself.

"I've been unavoidably detained, Hawes," I said. "Miss Jane Maitland has disappeared from her home."

"So I understood you over the telephone," he had brought my mail and stood by impassive.

"Also her brother-in-law is dead."

"The papers are full of it."

"There was no one to do anything, Hawes. I was obliged to stay," I apologized. I was ostentatiously examining my letters, and Hawes said nothing. I looked up at him sideways, and he looked down at me. Not a muscle of his face quivered save one eye, which has a peculiar twitching of the lid when he is excited. It gave him a sardonic appearance of winking. He winked at me then.

"Don't wait, Hawes," I said guiltily, and he took his hat and went out. Every line of his back was accusation. The sag of his shoulders told me I had let my biggest case go by default that day; the forward tilt of his head that I was probably insane; the very grip with which he seized the door-knob, his "Good night" from around the door, that he knew there was a woman at the bottom of it all. As he "Murder is an ugly word, Mr. Knox. Don't let us be sensational. Mr. Fleming had threatened to kill himself more than once—ask young Wardrop. He was sick and despondent; he left his home without a word, which points strongly to emotional insanity. He could have gone to any one of a half dozen large clubs here or at the capital. Instead, he goes to a little third rate political club, where, presumably, he does his own cooking and hides in a dingy room. Is that sane? Murder! It was suicide, and that puppy Wardrop knows it well enough."

"I have seen the police," he went on. "They agree with me that it was suicide, and the party newspapers will straighten it out tomorrow. The Times-Post, which is Democratic, of course. I can not handle."

"Suicide!" I said finally. "With no weapon, no powder marks and with a half finished letter at his elbow."

He brushed my interruption aside. "Mr. Fleming had been—careless," he said. "I can tell you in confidence that some of the state funds had been deposited in the Borough bank of Manchester, and—the Borough bank closed its doors at 10 o'clock today."

"I arrived here last night, and I searched the city for Mr. Fleming. This morning I heard the news. I have just come from the house; his daughter referred me to you. After all, what I want is a small matter. Some papers—state documents—are missing and no doubt are among Mr. Fleming's private effects. I would like to go through his papers and leave tonight for the capital."

"I have hardly the authority," I replied doubtfully. "Miss Fleming, I suppose, would have no objection. His private secretary, Wardrop, would be the one to superintend such a search."

"Can you find Wardrop—at once?"

Something in his eagerness put me on my guard.

"I will make an attempt," I said. "Let me have the name of your hotel, and I will telephone you if it can be arranged for tonight."

Oddly enough, I could not locate Wardrop. I got the Maitland house by telephone, to learn that he had left there about 3 o'clock and had not come back.

I went to the Fleming house for dinner. Edith still was there, and we tried to cheer Margery, a sad little figure in her black clothes. After the meal I called Lightfoot at his hotel and told him that I could not find Wardrop, that there were no papers at the house and that the office safe would have to wait until Wardrop was found to open it. He was disappointed and furious. From that minute in the struggle that was coming, like Fred, I was "for" the government.

"It was arranged that Edith should take Margery home with her for the night. I thought it a good idea. The very sight of Edith tucking in her babies and sitting down beside the library lamp to embroider me a scarfpin holder would bring Margery back to normal again. Edith is the sanest woman I know. I recognized it at the dinner table, where she had the little girl across from her planning her mourning hats before the dinner was half finished."

empire couch, in panels in the wall, covering cushions on the window seat. It was evidently Margery's private sitting room.

The linen cover that had been thrown over the divan was folded back, and a pillow from the window seat bore the imprint of a head. Margery had been right. Some one had used the room while the house was closed.

"Might it not have been your father?" Edith asked when we stood again at the foot of the stairs.

"I don't think so," Margery said wanly.

I put them in a cab and saw them start away. Then I went back into the house, as I had arranged to sleep there and generally to look after things. Whatever scruples I had had about taking charge of Margery Fleming and her affairs had faded with Wardrop's defection and the new mystery of the blue boudoir.

The lower floor of the house was full of people that night, local and state politicians, newspaper men and the usual crowd of the morbidly curious. Whatever panoply the death scene had lacked, Allan Fleming was lying in state now.

At midnight things grew quiet. I found Bella in the basement kitchen, with all the lights burning full, and I stood at the foot of the stairs while she scooted to bed like a scared rabbit. She was a strange creature, Bella—not so stupid as she looked, but sullen, morose—"smouldering" about expresses it.

A guest room in the third story had been assigned to me. The telephone bell rang just after I got into bed.

"This is the Times-Post. Is Mr. Wardrop there?"

"No."

"Who is this?"

"This is John Knox."

"The attorney?"

"Yes."

"Mr. Knox, are you willing to put yourself on record that Mr. Fleming committed suicide?"

"I am not going to put myself on record at all."

"Tonight's Star says you call it suicide and that you found him with the revolver in his hand."

"The Star lies!" I retorted, and the man at the other end chuckled.

"Many thanks," he said and rang off.

I went back to bed, irritated that I had betrayed myself. Loss of sleep for two nights, however, had told on me. In a short time I was sound asleep.

I awakened with difficulty. The wind was blowing hard, and a shutter was banging somewhere below. I looked down into the well-like space beneath me. It was one of those apparently chance movements that have vital consequences.

Below me on the wall across was a rectangle of yellow light, reflected from the library window of the Fleming home. There was some one in the house.

My first thought was burglars. My second Lightfoot. Luckily I had brought my revolver with me from Fred's that day, and it was under my pillow. To get it, put out the light and open the door quietly took only a minute. I was in pajamas, barefoot, as on another almost similar occasion, but I was better armed than before.

I ran into a heap of folding chairs that had been left by the undertaker,

I had not heard the door open. "I forgot to tell you that a gentle-man was here half a dozen times to-day to see you. He didn't give any name."

From around the door Hawes' nervous eye was winking wildly.

"You're not sick, Mr. Knox?"

"Never felt better."

"I thought I heard"—

"I was singing," I lied, looking him straight in the eye.

He backed nervously to the door.

"I have a little sherry in my office. Mr. Knox—twenty-six years in the wood. If you"—

"For God's sake, Hawes, there's nothing the matter with me!" I ex-claimed, and he went. But I heard him stand a perceptible time outside the door before he tiptoed away.

Almost immediately after some one entered the waiting room, and the next moment I was facing a man I had never seen before. He was tall, with thin, colorless beard trimmed to a Van-dyke point and pale eyes, blinking be-hind glasses. He had a soft hat crushed in his hand, and his whole manner was one of subdued excitement.

"Mr. Knox?" he asked from the door-way.

"Yes. Come in."

"I have been here six times since noon," he said, dropping rather than sitting in a chair. "My name is Light-foot. I am—was—Mr. Fleming's cash-ier."

"Yes?"

"I was terribly shocked at the news of his death," he stammered on, getting no help from me. "I was in town, and if I had known in time I could have kept some of the details out of the pa-pers. Poor Fleming—to think he would end it that way!"

"End it?"

"Shoot himself." He watched me closely.

"But he didn't," I protested. "It was not suicide, Mr. Lightfoot. According to the police it was murder."

His cold eyes narrowed like a cat's.

When we rose at last Margery looked toward the music room, where the dead man lay in state. But Edith took her by the arm and pushed her toward the stairs.

"Get your hat on right away while Jack calls a cab," she directed. "I must get home or Fred will keep the boys up until 9 o'clock. He is abso-lutely without principle."

CHAPTER X.

A Night in the Fleming Home.

WHEN Margery came down there was a little red spot burning in each pale cheek, and she ran down the stairs like a scared child. At the bottom she clutched the newel post and looked behind fearfully.

"What's the matter?" Edith demand-ed, glancing uneasily over her shoul-der.

"Some one has been upstairs," Marg-ery panted. "Somebody has been staying in the house while we were away."

At the door of a small room next to what had been Allan Fleming's bed-room we paused. It was filled with feminine knickknacks and mahogany lounging chairs. Wherever possible a pale brocade had been used, on the

The Need For Water.

Water constitutes about two-thirds of the weight of the body and enters into the composition of all the tissues and fluids. To keep the necessary proportion a large quantity needs to be ingested. One of the great dietetic errors is the neglect to take a sufficient quantity. The amount found in foods is insufficient, and about five cupfuls should be taken daily in beverages. A vegetable diet diminishes the need of water, while one composed largely of animal food increases this need.

FOR FUTURE PORK.

How to Handle the Squealers and Their Dams to Get Best Results.

In raising hogs cheaply it is necessary to begin with the sows. They must be fed well in order to produce a good litter of strong, vigorous pigs. Oats are a splendid feed. They are a well balanced food. Corn is not suitable. It is too fattening. Also provide plenty of pure water. Exercise is necessary. This can be provided by feeding the oats on a feeding floor, scattering them thinly. It is not necessary to grind the oats. The sows should be handled so one can go up to them at any time. A good time to have them farrow is about April 1. A good place is a stall in the horse or cow barn. The time of farrowing can be determined quite exactly. The milk comes into the teats four to six hours before farrowing. Don't feed the sow for twenty-four hours after farrowing, but give her slightly warmed water. Then feed some feed like oats and some shorts. When the little pigs are five or six weeks old begin feeding them some grain feed like ground oats. A good way is to fence off their trough so the sow can't get to it. Wean the pigs when about twelve weeks old.

A good pasture should be provided. For early spring a rye pasture is fine. This can be followed by a mixed pasture, as follows: Peas, two bushels per acre; barley, one bushel, and rape, three to four pounds. Some grain should be fed, as the pasture alone will not be sufficient. Then plant a patch of squaw corn. The pigs can be turned into this the middle of August. The sows that are to be used for breeding should not be turned into the corn, but keep them on the pasture and feed some grain, as oats or shorts. This requires the minimum of labor and makes cheap pork.

Open Shed Feeding of Steers.

As a result of seven years of experimenting at the Pennsylvania station the conclusion was reached that an open shed boarded up close on three sides and kept well bedded at all times is more efficient for fattening steers than the basement of a barn. During the winter of 1909-10 the cattle fed in an open shed made more rapid gains, attained a higher finish, sold for 15 cents more a hundred pounds and returned 11.6 cents more for each bushel of corn consumed than similar steers fed in barns. They also required less labor in feeding, and more straw was used in bedding. Results of previous work show that cattle which are fed in groups of ten or twelve each, with ample room at manger and troughs, make more satisfactory gains than similar cattle tied in stanchions. In shed feeding the opening should be to the south, and sides and roof should be tight, permitting no drafts.—Country Gentleman.

Scours in Lambs.

Garget in the ewe is claimed to be the cause of white scours in the lamb. This is prevented by milking from the udder daily the milk not required by the lamb. To cure scouring in lambs give eight to ten drops of tincture of opium in a little milk. If the lamb lies about and appears dull instead of playful, one may suspect constipation, which often kills these delicate creatures. To relieve it inject into the rectum a tablespoonful of warm, soapy water in which is a very little olive oil.

For Diseased Udders.

Isolate a cow the moment she has anything wrong with her udder and milk her last. Poultice the udder with hot oatmeal porridge in a wide bandage without holes being cut for teats. Twice daily rub well with a mixture of equal parts warm melted lard and fluid extract of poke root and belladonna leaves. Give a pound dose of epsom salts in three pints warm water as one dose and follow with a half ounce of fluid extract of poke root and two drams of saltpeter three times daily in water.—Dr. A. S. Alexander.

The Horse's Pulse.

The pulse of a horse may vary from twenty-eight to forty pulsations a minute. The best place to take the pulse of a horse is on the lower border of the jawbone, about four inches in front of the throat latch.

Real Trouble.

The college professor who says that children are merely little imitators and possess no imagination should become acquainted with our little friends, Charles and John. One day John, aged three, came running to his mother in deep distress. Upon inquiry the mother learned the cause of his tears.

"Muvver," wailed John, "Charles drew a picture of I got drowned, and he wouldn't draw a picture of he help me out!"—Judge.

THE HORSEMAN.

Keep the mud cleaned off the horses' legs and they will not have cracked heels.

Measure out your grain according to the work your horses are doing.

Musty oats make dull, lifeless looking coats on the horses which eat them.

The irritation caused by a poor driver lessens the ability of a good horse to do its best work.

Back end to is the way to hitch a horse out where the wind is blowing. When they are loose so they can do as they like you never saw a horse stand facing a storm.

A good horse will always command a good price, no matter how popular the automobile becomes, and this applies to draft, harness and saddle horses alike.

SUCCESS WITH HOGS.

A Swineherd's Method of Raising Thrifty Chester Whites.

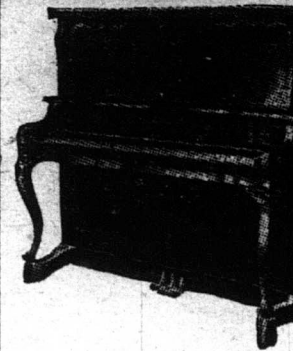

My plan in taking care of my Chester White hogs is to keep my brood sows in just as thrifty a condition as possible at all times, writes F. Little in Orange Judd Farmer. In fact, I strive to do this with all classes of swine. I sort the hogs as to size and age and keep them in small pasture lots. I let them run out all the time as I am a great believer in hogs having plenty of exercise. They must have this to do well. I also plan to feed them a variety of stuff and to feed regularly, believing that their stomachs need attention just as well as those of human beings.

My breeding sows are kept in a yard by themselves. I do not shut them up until farrowing time approaches. Sometimes I keep them in a pen a day or two beforehand, but I very frequently permit them to run out with the other sows. I am convinced that the sow should be shut up by herself and fed alone some time before and some days after farrowing. After the pigs come the sow should not be fed very much for a few days else the pigs will scour and some of them may die. After two or three days the sow should have her feed the same as before farrowing. Provide plenty of room for exercise at all times for the sow as well as the pigs.

When the pigs are a month or so old they will eat a little corn and a little swill. After the pigs are eight weeks

When Museums Get Presents They Don't Want.

One of the most freakish offers made to a museum was that made the British Museum a few weeks ago. A Dublin wrote that he was willing to body of a hen preserved in this hen having been hatched farm with a human face.

The Museum refused the offer, dignity, but one official sent official note expressing curiosity asking to examine the unusual. When it arrived a glance showed very ordinary chicken, except fact that it had been unable to horn-tissue like the ordinary so had neither beak nor claws.

Quaint offers like this are a thing worry with museums. Maybe seem to think that a museum has the same kind of fre those to be seen in sideshow fair. Offers of three-legged eight legged pigs, and eight horses keep pouring in.

Some of the offers would make directors and curators of the museum gasp if they arrived less frequent. A couple of years ago a Librarian received a letter in him that the writer had in his session the original apple with Eve tempted Adam. It had to be taken out of, and the rest was fied. As for the price, he was to put that at the very mode of $25,000.

The director of another was some five years ago, what was to be the original death-n Lord Palmerston. The offer accompanied by the astounding notion that some of the hairs merston's beard remained in the ter, and that, respectable were prepared to swear that it had since grown.

The sows that are to be used for breeding should not be turned into the corn, but keep them on the pasture and feed some grain, as oats or shorts. An expensive hog house is not necessary. A straw shed will answer very well. Set up some posts in a circle, with an alley leading to the east. Put woven wire fence on the posts and some poles on top. Throw the straw over it when thrashing. The A shaped houses are fine for the sows after they have farrowed.—W. R. Lanxon, Superintendent Mettinger Substation, N. D.

DAIRY FARMS LAST.

The greatest advantage in dairy farming is its relation to the fertility of the soil. No other system of farming excels it in this respect, and but few equal it. A farm used for dairy purposes does not lose in fertility, but gains, and may be used for this purpose almost indefinitely.

Her eighth litter, last March, had sixteen; all chilled. Her ninth litter had seven; six raised. She has recently farrowed fourteen pigs, eleven of which are living. She never was bred but once for a litter and has farrowed only one dead pig. The Chester White sow shown is an excellent specimen of this fine breed of hogs.

old I wean them. The sow will then not be giving much milk, and the pigs will do better if shut off by themselves and properly fed. Give these weanling pigs a warm place to sleep in, plenty of water at all times, good feed, and you will be surprised to see how fast they grow. Started in this way they will weigh fifty pounds at two months old and at three months they will weigh from seventy to ninety pounds. At four months old I have had pigs weigh 123 pounds and at five months 200 pounds. This fall one of my seven month pigs weighed 270 pounds and was good enough to take the blue ribbon in a class of forty-four at the Illinois state fair.

I keep my herd boars by themselves and feed them well. I want to say further concerning feeding my sows that a 250 pound sow will take care of twelve quarts of good swill three times a day and three ears of corn.

I try to provide swine pasture as fully as I can. I have red clover and timothy. Clover, of course, is the very best feed we can get in this country. I use a standard dip and either dip or spray my hogs every sixty days.

THE BEAUTY TABLE.

How Old Lace May Be Used Without Injury.

Dressing tables modeled on the mod- est muslin veiled box of our grand- mothers' time have recently become popular. The modern variations, how- ever, are fashioned on a much more ambitious scale, albeit one that can never become common, as it lends it- self to so many inventions, besides the display of that personal touch which is the acme of distinction in home decoration.

A new toilet table is a plain table, but upon this is hung a "petticoat" of gossamer muslin and satin. The top is a sheet of plate glass (with smooth, rounded edges), beneath which are dis- played choice bits of embroidery, old lace, flower painted parchment, quaint patterned chints or even dried rose leaves scattered over a silvery ground and pressed flat by the glass, while flat ruchings of ribbon are used to cover the tackings.

Every variety of muslin is being used, with linings of satin, chints or sateen, while knots of broche ribbon, posies of silken leaved rosebuds and gold and silver fillet lace are among the beautiful decorations used:

Perhaps the most fascinating shape is one fashioned like a crescent writ- ing table with round ends. A "skirt" of rose pink satin is tacked round the edge of the table, and over this is drap- ed a cloud of gossamer muslin, caught up with tiny posies of forgetmenots and moss rose buds. The top is cov- ered with tightly stretched blue moire, over which is laid an exquisite piece of embroidered lawn—in fact, all that re- mains of the family christening robe!

The single sheet of plate glass pro- tects it as carefully as if it were in a case, while, besides being an interest- ing bairloom, it contrives to pay the double debt of use and ornament. A flat ruching of pale pink satin ribbon covers the tacking.

On this table stands an oblong mir- ror in an old Florentine gilt frame, and an elegant touch is given by a quaintly shaped dull gold basket, with a high handle formed of rosebuds and forget- menots, containing a hatpin cushion stuffed with potpourri.

EFFECTS WITH CUSHIONS.

If You Have an Old Indigo Blue Bed- spread In Woven Design Use It by All Means In Your Furnishings—De- lightful Color Scheme In Shell Pink. The Charm of Fish Net.

Here are some suggestions for mak- ing a young girl's bedroom charming and dainty during the summer months. If you have among the heirlooms in your house an old woven bedspread of wool in indigo blue and white you can make a wonderful cushion out of blue denim, with some embroidered Japa- nese swallows in flight on it. The stitches can be of the long and easily worked type, and you will be sur- prised to find how few of them will make a dainty, airy effect in embroid- ering these white and gray swallows skimming across an imaginary sky of denim.

If your bedspread is of cretonne, with a canary tone predominating, your cushion would be a perfectly charming one made of a pale gold shade of sateen with a small spray of purple wistaria embroidered across it or else big purple clematis. Tie this to the chair with violet ribbon. The bedspread and cushions really give the keynote to the room in color and are very important in the scheme of fur- nishings. Now, suppose your favorite color to be shell pink. You can carry out the scheme in a bedspread of sateen with appliques of lace medallions over it at intervals, and you can have cushions of the same sateen with smaller lace medallions thereon. Fish net is very "artistic" used over plain color for spread and cushions, with a big, soft bow of ribbon on the spread and one on the tie couch cushion. A simple delft pattern is lovely in cre- tonne, and this makes a pretty blue and white spread and cushions with delft blue bows. But the most fasci- nating color for a spread is light green. It is airy and springlike, and the embroidered fern front for the cushion is just perfect in the way of suggesting the return of buds and flowers to the woods.

HOUSEHOLD LINEN.

How to Be Up to Date In Your Table Appointments.

The large damask tablecloth has given way to the vogue for sets of linen mats, including large oval ones to be placed beneath the dishes, small circular ones for the meat plates and still smaller for use with cheese and salad plates. The change in fashion is all on the side of the decorative, for not only are the mats extremely beautiful in themselves, but they afford an opportunity like- wise for the display of a fine dining table, the darkness of the wood show- ing up to advantage the silver and cut glass arranged upon it. The mats themselves are usually placed upon others of thin wicker or of closely twisted strings in order to obviate the possibility of harm to the table through the heat of the dishes.

A GREAT BELIEVER IN "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Well Known Ontario Merchant Has Faith Because "Fruit-a-tives" Cured Him

MR. JAMES DOBSON

BRONTE, ONT., MARCH 1st, 1912.

"Fruit-a-tives has made a complete cure in my case of Rheumatism, that had at least five years standing before I commenced the treatment. The trouble was principally in my right hip and shoulder, the pain from it was almost unendurable. Not being able to sleep on that side, if I chanced to turn on my right side while asleep, the pain would immediately awaken me. This kept up until I started taking "Fruit-a-tives". I started by taking one or two tablets with a large glass of water, in the morning before breakfast and experienced pronounced relief very shortly. After a continued treatment for about six months, I was cured and am now in firstclass health. This, I attribute to my persistent use of "Fruit-a-tives" and I heartily recommend your remedy to any Rheumatic sufferers."

FATAL MATHEMATICS.

[A man should marry a woman half his own age plus seven years.—Old Maxim.]

See how the fates their skill combine To spoil a tale of "might have been."
They met when he was twenty-nine
And she was only seventeen.

For years in absence they adore
Each other, just as lovers do,
To greet when he is thirty-four
And she, alas, is twenty-two!

When next their mutual gaze they fix
The waiting time was nearly o'er,
For he was going thirty-six
And she admitted twenty-four.

They parted then (as I'm alive,
It was a piteous sight to see)
Until he totaled forty-five
And she had weathered thirty-three.

Their fates will never now entwine.
Their courtship's course is nearly done,
For she's a girl of sixty-nine
And he's a swain of eighty-one.

director of another was offered, years ago, what was claimed to be the original death-mask of almerston. The offer was accepted by the astounding information that some of the hairs of Pall's beard remained in the plaster that, respectable witnesses prepared to swear that the hair was grown.

Some of the letters are more than funny. A West of Museum recently received a box from a Welsh plowman's inclosing a stone with some yellow on it. She said her husband told her that was the way as found, and would the Museum please tell her how much the stone was worth. She knew gold had been found in different parts of the letter ended up with expressions of gratitude to Heaven that age would now be an easier one. Of course, the stone was just as interesting as any other stone. As letters come up about radio-fost people know that this "priceless substance" is found in blende, and pieces of what expert owner thinks is pitch come up in little registered or an opinion.

On the humorous side of the "genitor" business is more marked years ago a Yorkshire grocer for the first time in his life went a winter in Egypt. When he came back, he brought with him a small cannon, which he recently offered to the British Museum on condition the donor's name were distinctly displayed. He thought that an ancient Egyptian must be unique, as most people under the impression that were only invented a few years ago. But the date 4115 B.C. to make matters certain.

A cannon, it turned out, dated from a hundred years back. Some zealous dealer, on hearing the express interest in the find of cannon during excavations, had decided to see if he could get it for a few dollars, and probably more as than anything else, had the B.C. cut in after the number and it for $250. A generous donor tried the army stores. It was they who informed that nothing dated "B.C." but a coin or a cannon, could be a genuine antique. Then he said on him, though it needed tinkering out.

Living on the Heights.

Just learn to live in a beauty, restlessness, that shall become a part of ourselves. In life there is no such degraded but knows full well that he should do, but this beautiful thing is not strong within him. It is this invisible abstract strength that it must endeavor to increase first of all and this strength increases only in those who have acquired the habit of going more frequently than other summits where life absorbs life, upon heights whence we see every act and every thought are bound up with something and immortal.—Maeterlinck.

Worse Still.

—Does your pa ever send you before 7 when you're naughty? —Worse'n that. When I've been nakes me get up before 7.—Boston Transcript.

—Today. 'Tis madness to do anything.

IN DRAPED EFFECT.

The sweet girl graduate is of white voile trimmed with the new embroidery that resembles real lace. A novel note is the use of the selvage of the material without hemming in the drapery.

Space Savers.

Pasteboard boxes covered with wall paper are attractive and hold all sorts of small dress accessories. These boxes, bought in an enameled frame, are expensive, but a carpenter can cheaply put together a wood frame of the desired size which can be enameled with two or three coats of white enamel and then fitted with boxes covered with paper matching that of the room where they are to stay. Labels reading "Veils," "Gloves," "Handkerchiefs," "Neckwear," "Stockings" or any other words desired should be pasted neatly on the face of the boxes.

Cleaning Pictures.

Pictures are things that collect dust in a terrible way, said a housewife in Home Notes, so I wash them all over with a damp leather—the backs as well as the fronts. Dirt doesn't show on the brown paper backs, and you may think that there is none there. But just run your cloth over and you'll change your mind pretty quick, for it will come away simply coated with black.

Attractive.

"Why won't you stage my play, 'How to Keep a Servant?'" "It isn't much of a play." "The name's enough. Every woman would go if only to see how the problem is solved." — Louisville Courier-Journal.

Keep Off the Grass.

"What does that sign say?" "Keep off the grass." "They have, haven't they?" "You bet! They haven't let a blade grow."—Harvard Lampoon.

extremely beautiful in themselves, but they afford an opportunity likewise for the display of a fine dining table, the darkness of the wood showing up to advantage the silver and cut glass arranged upon it. The mats themselves are usually placed upon others of thin wicker or of closely twisted strings in order to obviate the possibility of harm to the table through the heat of the dishes.

Some especially choice sets of these dinner mats are of handmade linen richly embroidered in an openwork pattern of leaves and flowers executed after the manner of the "broderie anglaise." Into the worked design is introduced a number of Italian fillet lace squares, also hand worked and displaying in their design all manner of quaint beasts and birds copied from antique models. The edges of the mats are finished with a narrow border of thread lace, and although the effect is elaborate in the extreme, the materials employed are sufficiently substantial to withstand much wear and tear.

The Dictograph.

The dictograph is an innocent enough looking apparatus. It doesn't differ much from a telephone. But where a person has to talk straight into the transmitter of a telephone one has to speak merely above a whisper where the dictograph transmitter is exposed, and the words can be heard faithfully reproduced in any other room connected by means of a wire receiver. It is on more than the magnifier and transmitter of tiny sounds. A small round rubber box with apertures to admit the sound waves to a peculiarly constructed vibrating disk takes in the conversation of the room and passes it along to the man at the receiving end. The success of the dictograph is based on its extreme sensitivity, and therein is the secret of its construction, for the inventor of the device has declined to explain the inner workings. The whole apparatus weighs little less than one pound and can be carried in one's pocket without any inconvenience.

The Imperial Manchu Family.

The ex-emperor of China, who is now eight years of age, is making great progress with his studies and spends about five hours a day reading. With the empress dowager the young emperor lives in almost solitary state, the number of persons seeking audience steadily decreasing from day to day. Little correspondence is received from imperial relatives. To add to their troubles, the deposed rulers are in great financial straits and are unable to even pay their attendants. It is stated that a plan of discharging most of these functionaries is being considered, but the statement that the proposal includes the advance to each official of a bonus equivalent to six years' salary is not easily credible.—Japan Advertiser.

Perfect Chronometers.

The French watchmaker, notwithstanding years of trial, is not yet able to rival the Swiss, nor is he able to manufacture chronometers equal to those made in Geneva. The chronometrical observatory of Besancon has interesting records on this subject. This observatory subjected watches to severe tests under a great variety of conditions before formulating the rule that a watch to be perfect must meet with not less than 300 requirements. Judging by this hard and fast rule, there are no perfect watches in the world, yet certain pocket chronometers have covered over 263 of the points laid down by the observatory.

Puzzled Him.

While going along a country road the driver of an automobile saw ahead of him an old man walking by the roadside, also a dog. The dog was not content to remain on the side, but kept crossing the road and was caught by the car and instantly killed.

The driver turned the car as quickly as possible and went back to see what damage had been done and found the farmer gazing sorrowfully at the remains of the dog. The driver took out his pocketbook and handed the man $10, asking if that would pay for the dog. He said it would, so the other got in the car and went away. The old man watched the car till it was lost to view; then, taking off his hat to scratch his head, remarked, "I wonder who owned that dog?"—Harper's Magazine.

Quality of Hardness.

Paul Helleu, the etcher of beautiful women, complained in New York of a certain hard quality in even the fairest American faces.

"Some of the most perfect faces I have seen," he said, "possessed this quality of hardness in a marked degree. They reminded me, indeed, of the girl to whom a suitor said:

"Miss Vincent—Annabel—let me prove my love not by words only, but by deeds!"

"Well, George," said the young girl calmly, "did you bring the deeds with you?"—Detroit Free Press.

Where It Was Signed.

The morning class had been duly instructed and enlightened upon the subject of our national independence. Feeling sure she had made a real and lasting impression with her explanations and blackboard illustration, the young teacher began with the usual round of questions.

"Now, Sammy Smith, where was the Declaration of Independence signed?"

Sammy, with a shout of glee: "At de bottom, ma'am—that's what you said!" —Ladies' Home Journal.

Fifty-one Years Detracts Little

Rev. Cairns.

His fifty-first year in the ministry made Rev. Hugh Cairns' sermon Wesley Methodist church last night none the less vigorous, and the preacher spoke to the large congregation with great force. The subject of his sermon was a strong appeal to the congregation to follow their Saviour. At the close of his sermon he related the early days of the church which he used to preach to a much smaller congregation in a more humble era. Rev. Mr. Cairns announced that he was fifty-one years in the ministry.—Saskatoon Star June 2nd.

A peculiar and fatal accident overtook Mrs. Nancy Scrimshaw, wife of Philip Scrimshaw. The old lady, who was in her seventy-ninth year, fell out of a window, and the shock caused her death on the 8th inst. She leaves to mourn their loss two daughters and three sons, as follows: Mrs. W. H. Wagar, Marlbank, (with whom deceased resided), Mrs. J. Dunlop, Deseronto, Messrs. Fred and Ferguson Scrimshaw, Richmond, and Philip Scrimshaw, of Belleville. The remains were taken to Deseronto on Tuesday, to Mount Pleasant cemetery, where service was held and interment took place.

A very pretty wedding took place at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. A. Palmer, Kingston Road, on June 4th, when Miss Ada Florence Reid, second daughter of the late Dr. Reid, of Napanee, entered the drawing room leaning on the arm of her brother, W. D. Reid, and wearing a cream dress trimmed with Irish lace and pearls and was united in marriage to Mr. Arthur Harold Young, of Rednersville, Prince Edward Co. Rev. W. T. Wickett, of Shannonville, performed the ceremony in the presence of a number of immediate relatives and friends. The presents were numerous and costly showing the popularity of the bride. Mr. and Mrs. Young left on the evening train for Ottawa and points east, the bride travelling in a dark blue suit of serge and plumed hat.

we have been appointed sole repre-

of Hobberlin, tailors to the Canadian gentleman. This firm we have been informed employs a most skillful and artistic designer to whom they pay the modest sum of $8000 per annum.
Their sample outfit is the most elab-

house doing a special order business.
We KNOW their Cloths are of a high order and the range embraces every line that a good dresser could desire.
They absolutely guarantee every garment they turn out to be perfect in fit and workmanship. Money back if not satisfactory, and no grumbling.
What more could any man ask. We would be delighted to show their range of samples to any man contemplating the purchase of a new suit. If you order and the garments are not entirely satisfactory to YOU it will cost you nothing whatever but the time you spent in making your
